The Christian Warfare

A Message from the President of the Church

In days of peace we have been accustomed to speak of the Christian way of life. Now the thinking of men is being influenced by wars and rumours of wars. Our environment is as martial as that in which Paul lived and in which he wrote the sixth chapter of his letter to the Ephesians. It is inevitable, therefore, that we contrast today the Christian's preparation for the spiritual conflict, in which he finds himself engaged, with the conflict which a pagan way of life has brought upon the nations of the world. In the midst of a world in strife Paul bids his readers to stand fast in the power of the might of our God and to put on the whole armor of God. Abandoning martial language, we too would admonish our readers in a day such as this to continue throughout 1941 in the way of life which Paul recommends to the Ephesians.

This way of life consists first of all in an abiding in the truth. Men have distorted this word, "truth." For some it had come to mean only demonstrable facts. Others claim the right to label their own theories as truth. Because the interpretation of factual evidence changed with the increase of knowledge, and because theories were discovered not always to be based on fact, men began to think of truth as variable. The sense of the absolute was lost. This was followed by an exaltation of the opposite of truth, the lie. With diabolical ingenuity the lie has been developed into a science. Cabinet positions have been created for propaganda through which admittedly false information is disseminated. Truth, however, which is found when man walks with God is not variable. It is based on the inner harmony of a man's life with the ultimate realities, with the one abiding reality in the universe, the holy, eternal, living God. It is this living in the truth; the reconciliation of our life with the God of truth and the resulting deliverance of a man's soul from his own self and from the falsehoods that surround him in the world, which makes him free in the midst of a world in bondage. In this truth we would walk in 1941.

The Christian way of life is the way of righteousness. It is a way of eternal righteous living. Our day stands in need of just that. Properly our day has been challenged to engage in a "moral rearmament." Personally, we will go farther and speak of the need of a complete spiritual rearmament. Certain it is that our day needs a return to a righteousness which is found only then when man in faith has surrendered his will unto the holy and righteous God. This too is the one and only sufficient basis of justice and righteousness in the relationship of man to man. It is the God in whom is found the strength, the power for righteous living, to whom we would dedicate our loyalties anew in 1941.

Again the way of life which is found as man walks with God is the only way which leads to peace. There is no other gospel of peace, no other good news of good will among men, than the message of the cross, which is the wisdom and power of God. The gospel of peace is more than a message concerning a God of grace who in His love and mercy longs to reconcile sinful man unto himself and thus restore unto his tortured soul the peace which he can find nowhere else. It is the gospel of peace among men of good will. In these days of conflict, and strife, and destruction of life and property, we nevertheless have cause to thank God that the gospel of reconciliation has laid hold on the hearts of His children. The bond of Christian love has not been severed which unites the Christians of many lands into one fellowship. A deep conviction of oneness in Christ still overrules the lives of Christians, even in belligerent countries, enabling them to pray for their fellow believers in enemy nations. May this not be an earnest of what we dare look forward to when men truly shall have been one, through the witness of the Church, unto that God who in Christ has given us the gospel of peace. The only hope for a warless world lies with the Christian message. To this message we would dedicate ourselves anew in 1941.

The Christian way of life is the way of faith. Faith is the ability to look with confidence to the future. Not merely to look with hope and assurance to eternity itself. It is the confidence which fills the hearts of men as they think of a better day which, by the grace of God, will dawn for this old world of ours. It was this faith which enabled the early Christians to look forward and to wait for the coming of the day of the Lord. It is this faith which caused their successors, and us, to dream, and not only dream, but to pray and work for the coming of the Kingdom of God in which His will is done on earth as it is in Heaven. We pray for an increased measure of such faith for all of us in 1941.

Finally this way of life, which is found as man entrusts himself to God, is the way of salvation. It is the way which leads to true well-being, both in time and in eternity. "I am come that men may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly," says the Christ. We have discovered this to be true as we have accepted His invitation to come unto Him. We confidently believe that if men everywhere will accept the Christian message, then for all mankind will dawn the day of true well-being, of salvation.

Hopefully, joyously, in the midst of a world in which despair has laid hold on the hearts of millions, and sorrow and suffering is their daily portion, do we go into 1941, because we know that the Lord is with us. He is the source of our strength. We know that the power of His might will not fail us.

The Emblem on Our Cover

On the front cover of the Year Book and Almanac appears an emblem which is of special significance at the present time. For by the time the book is in your hand our united Church will be in the midst of a celebration of three great anniversaries:—the 100th of the founding of the Evangelical Synod of North America, the 50th of the Hungarian Reformed Church in this country, and the 215th of the beginning of the Reformed Church in the United States.

The anniversary emblem was conceived in the fertile brain of the Rev. J. P. Meyer, D.D., now superintendent of the Evangelical Deaconess Hospital, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The artist who executed the design was Mr. Fred Toelle, son of the Rev. H. C. Toelle, pastor of Zion Church, St. Louis.

For an interpretation of the emblem we reprint here an article from The Messenger of June 20, 1940, written by Professor Carl E. Schneider, Ph.D., of Eden Theological Seminary. Dr. Schneider is Chairman of the Committee on Anniversary Celebrations. His interpretation follows:

"The central symbol of the emblem is the cross. Under it are gathered four other symbols, the hour-glass, the open church-doors, the Bible, and the uplifted hands.

"The cross emphasizes the centrality of the sacrifice Christ brought once for all mankind. 'For neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved.' Acts 4: 12.

"Witness to the cross was borne through the ages. Years came, and years went, customs changed, men grew proud and rich, they followed ways of their own choosing. They fell and were abased, they spoke proudly of progress and development, only to end on the note of despair.

"Silently the hour-glass bears witness that only time passes. Man really remains unimproved. He commits the sins of his fathers, but he does it more efficiently and devastatingly. He brings his days to an end with a sigh. All he has to show for his troubles are his mis-spent years. So speaks the hour-glass.

"And so men found that the years in themselves have no meaning. The years can have meaning only as man enters the open doors of the Church and comes under the proclamation of a Gospel which alone can deal effectively with time and the ravages of time. In the midst of the stream of history the Church bore witness to the abiding presence of an eternal Lord, who is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

"In the Church men were reminded to have their steps guided by a book, The Bible, which has a message neither old nor new, but eternal. And as men hearkened to the voice of the Church they searched the Scriptures and found themselves in kinship with Moses and the prophets, with Jesus and the apostles.

"Then, as men came upon the recognition that Jesus Christ is Lord of all, they lifted up their hands in prayer, signifying their allegiance and loyalty to Him, imploring of Him the forgiveness of their sins, and expectantly waiting of Him the gift of life and salvation."

Ultima Veritas

In the bitter waves of woe,
Beaten and tossed about,
By the sullen winds that blow
From the desolate shores of doubt—
When the anchors that faith had cast
Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
To the things that cannot fail.

I know that right is right;
That it is not good to lie;
That love is better than spite
And a neighbor than a spy;
In the darkest night of the year,
When the stars have all gone out,
Courage is better than fear,
And faith is truer than doubt.

And fierce though the fiends may fight
And long though the angels hide,
I know that Truth and Right
Have the universe on their side;
And that somewhere, beyond the stars
Is a Love that is better than fate;
When the night unlocks her bars,
"I shall see Him, and I will wait!"

His Home-Coming

FROM THE GERMAN OF FRIEDRICH JACOBSEN

He was a famous alienist, and those who considered themselves well-informed counted him among the great lights of science.

Upon the pitiable creatures who were brought to him—not one of them came voluntarily, but there were very many of them—he laid his hands, not like the Great Physician of long ago, but in order to learn the structure of the skull and discover therefrom the irregularities in the substance of the brain. Then he would gaze into their restless, glassy eyes, and people said that he could read the very depths of the soul.

But he only smiled at such nonsense, for he did not believe there was a soul.

In the very prime and midst of his busy and successful career he suddenly felt as though something laid a hand upon him, in the very same way as he was accustomed to lay his hands upon his patients, only it was invisible, mysterious, and therefore terribly depressing.

At first he took it for a mere mood that would pass away. It was not long, however, before he seemed to feel that his thoughts were less subject to his will, than formerly, that they seemed to stray away from the straight and well-ordered path of reason. Not, or not yet, into the night, but into a dim, uncanny twilight.

This observation—for the physician was still supreme—was all the more inexplicable as his family was untainted by anything of this kind, nor had there been any kind of dissipation in his past life. He could even pride himself on the manner in which he had succeeded in distributing toil and recreation during his active life, so that not a single scientific cause could be made to account for his case.

And yet he gradually felt himself as an inmate of his institution, rather than the head, which he still was in name. One of his colleagues to whom he unburdened himself advised him to drop his work for a while and go upon a prolonged journey.

"We must not play with the ghost of our age," he said. "We think we have mastered him, as the lion-tamer thinks he has mastered the beast in his cage, and yet, when we least expect it, it jumps upon us. You have gazed at the beast too long; go out of its way, for it is getting ready to jump."

"Is that your whole explanation?" the learned man had asked; and the other had replied: "The diseases of a certain period have their source not in the individual, but in the mass; they are in the air, as it were. I have given up seeking their final cause."

The professor felt that he would like to go home.

He could not account for the feeling, for there was hardly a memory that could have made him long for the lonely village on the moor.

True, his mother was buried there, but she had died so early in his youth that not even a shadow of her picture remained with him. The few playmates of his childhood had probably gone away, as he had done, for there was nothing to do but dig for peat and gaze upon the brackish waters of the moorland.

"That may be dangerous" the professor had once said jocularly, and now he himself was on his way to the deep, dark swamplands which he called his home.

After a long railway journey he left the last station and wandered off into the fields. What seemed to be storm clouds were rising from the mists of the evening, but the quiet of the autumn atmosphere was still upon the landscape, and the dead leaves were silently falling to the ground from the scattered and stunted trees which he passed. The flowers had all faded and the juniper bushes were bare. The stubby grass became scarcer as he walked on, and soon the sandy soil he trod began to yield softly beneath his feet.

He was walking the moorland now, and on both sides of the path were pools of water glimmering strangely in the twilight while stunted willows sent their long shoots upward like fierce Gorgon heads with serpents for hair. Now and then the professor stood still and pushed his cane into the soft black soil.

"There is no bottom," he said, "even as our life is without cause or reason," and his eyes wandered over the willow trees around him whose trunks exhaled a dim phosphorescent light.

"It is the decaying wood," he said to himself, "we know all about it. Only the ignorant talk of ghosts. But there is a ghostly atmosphere about the trees, like some of the thoughts that arise out of the bottomless depths of life and stare at us from the solitude. The trees should be cut down and destroyed."

With the night wind that now arose came also a weak and uncertain moonlight. It seemed to wander about through the gathering gloom as though it sought a place of rest, but could find none on the scattered water pools on which its rays fell. Its trembling rays seemed like a wandering, storm-driven soul that could find no haven of refuge, even though it might seek to hide itself in the very depths.

"I know what it is," said the doctor, but the sound of his own voice made him tremble. "Most of those who are brought to us have this longing for rest. And according to the law we must assume the role of the water, we must drive the dying light back into the darkness with padded cells and guards and straight-jackets. It is a cruel and a foolish task which I shall no longer take upon myself."

And then he had to remind himself of what had brought him to this place—yes, it was the yearning for home.

Like a vision of prehistoric pile-dwellings the village suddenly rose up before him in the gloom, almost as if invisible hands had unrolled the level surface of the moor and lifted a long forgotten world up into the night wind. In the midst of the straggling group of straw-thatched huts the spire of the village church arose, like a gaunt finger pointing heavenward, and the professor could hear the low creaking of the weathercock almost as soon as the spire came into view. He walked around the silent village and stopped before a low wall of sod and rocks.

At first he had planned to call on the pastor and ask for a night's lodging, but now it seemed impossible for him to disturb the peaceful slumber of people who were utter strangers to him, just because he had been born within these walls more than forty years ago. There was no tavern among the twenty odd huts that made up the village.

Perhaps, however, there was a cemetery, where the homeless ones slept?

A few steps brought him to the narrow gate, and in a moment he stood among the dark and silent crosses that marked the graves; as he walked slowly over past the side of the church his feet could hardly make their way through the long waving grass.

In the dim moonlight he could barely discover the remains of a crumbling headstone, it had sunk down so deep into the yielding soil that the exposed portion might easily have been covered by his foot.

And the lonely man sat down on a near-by grave, newly made, and gazed long and silently upon the sunken headstone.

"These are the remains of what once was home," he said at last in a low voice. "Within a year even they will have sunk out of sight, or they will have made a new grave and scattered the remains of the old. Mother, I wish you could speak to me."

A sudden gust of wind swept over the place and the passing cloud obscured the moon from view. It was fearfully lonesome and dark.

"You cannot speak to me," the learned man continued. "The face that once smiled at me so lovingly has become a grinning skull, and the thoughts that coursed through it have no place in the earth that covers it. Such will be the end of all of us, and I believe it is well that it is so. For if you could think now, and were able to turn your thoughts back to earth, you would have to weep over your son, and yet you would be unable to help him. I feel something drawing me the way that you have gone before me, mother, but if you could feel now, the same lot would be mine, for we are of one blood."

Meanwhile it had grown still darker and more stormy.

The professor arose and leaned upon his staff.

"I am beginning to understand the diseases of the mind," he said, "and I feel that sooner or later we shall all fall a prey to them. We have parents, and they leave us alone, a wife, a friend. None is so poor as to have no loving heart, and none is so rich as to be exempt from seeing it cease beating. It is like a light that ceases to burn because the wick is consumed; we cannot light it again in the empty air. And the more flames we see thus extinguished, the darker and more lonely it becomes. Grasp at the spark when it vanishes, try to hold the last breath when it escapes from the dying breast, close your hand upon that which you think you possess, and when you open it you have nothing. Life is a burden and the end is redemption."

Silently the professor sat there thinking, indifferent to his surroundings, not knowing what he did.

From the distant days of childhood there came to him the memory of a pond just beyond the cemetery, and a voice whose memory had slumbered long seemed to say to him, "Do not go near the water, child, for it is very deep. All the tears that men have wept because of death have come together there, and they are innumerable and unmeasurable."

The professor turned his head and listened; no one had spoken to him, he was alone. But he answered nevertheless:

"The tears that are wept because of life are enough to fill an ocean. What are the waters of death compared to it? I will fathom its depths."

And he had soon found the place where he had stood as a child and thrown pebbles into the water. Many bubbles had risen up from the depths and he had been afraid.

For a brief moment the moon came out from behind the clouds, and his pale light illumined the water, but it could not take away its uncanniness.

The rushing sound he heard down at the steep banks of the pond was not the splashing of waves but the thickly grown bulrushes swaying before the wind. Only far out in the middle was an open space, because the water there was too deep to allow the rushes to take root. A narrow wooden walk led out to this open space. At its farthest end a raven flew up with a loud "caw! caw" when it heard the sound of human steps.

"They say that animal creatures are frightened at the unnatural," the unhappy man mused. "But it is mere superstition. The poor beast fears for its life, that is the difference between reason and mere instinct."

Then his feet rested upon the old wooden walk and he felt that it would give way at his next step.

Then it might pass as an accident—

Strangely enough, at the last moment this benighted soul clutched the foolish idea that it made some difference whether the last step into the unknown night was the result of his own act or of an accident caused by his own act, and with this thought came the questioning doubts as to the reason for the idea.

Human judgment and human gossip?

It was raining out of a new darkness, and the rain and the wind beat into the man's face. He felt himself an outcast from human society and was utterly disgusted with human institutions. On the other hand the idea was repulsive to him that he might, in a condition where time and space no longer existed, mayhap in an infinite twilight, perhaps in infinite light, and without physical feelings, be asked by an unknown voice, or, if there was no voice, be pitilessly pursued by the torturing thought:

"What wilt thou here, O man?"—

He called all the weapons of science, and all the force of reason he could still command, to his aid, but he could move neither hand nor foot.

The wind and the rain beat into his face and around him was the blackness of night.

Was there no light at all in the darkness?

O yes, above the clouds were the stars, and when we speak of a starless sky, there is only a veil between these eternal witnesses and our mortal eye, but man has forgotten to turn his eye upwards, and he has forgotten to wait until the veil is rent asunder. It is an earthly light we seek.

Suddenly it burst upon his sight, somewhere off the main street. It was only a small flame, so small that the hand could hide it, and that it might have been extinguished between thumb and forefinger. And yet it seemed to possess that mysterious persistence that is able to overcome the deepest darkness.

The professor ascended the bank of the pond and the higher he came the brighter the light shone. He followed its beckoning and soon stood before a little house, a house so low and humble that he could have touched the moss-covered thatch with his hands.

The roof awoke memories that had slumbered long. He remembered how he had stood beneath it as a child and stretched his little hands toward it in the effort to reach it. And then he heard the same voice that had spoken to him before say, "Edwin, my child, that is too high for you. Wait until you have become a man, then you will have to bend down to come under my roof."

And the learned man humbly bowed his head as he approached the door.

The door was not locked, nor did he need to feel his way through the dark vestibule; his hand was guided by the same memory that had led him here across field and moor, and then, with a word of greeting on his lips, he stood in the door of a small but neatly kept room.

There were only two, an old woman and a child. The woman lay abed, the child sat beside the bed on a low stool, the little lamp between them. The child had been reading from the Bible, but as the stranger entered, the book had fallen from her hands. As Edwin bent down to pick it up his eye fell upon the first page where a name had been written.

"I see I have guessed aright, Tante Anna," he said, "it is really you. I should not have thought that we should ever see each other again. Do you remember little Edwin?"

The old woman had slowly raised her feeble figure and now sat up, the soft light of the lamp falling full upon her face. It had never been a beautiful face, but it was transfigured by an infinite kindness and goodness.

"Little Edwin," she replied, "that was long, long ago. Your beard disfigures you, else I should probably recognize your face at once. But the voice seems familiar. Who told you that I was ill, Edwin, and that the end was near?"

"No one told me. I did not even know that you were still living. I only wanted to see my old home again."

"Yes," she answered slowly, "that wish always comes to every one of us, sometimes sooner, sometimes later. Are you alone?"

"As alone as you are."

She thought a moment and then beckoned to the child.

"I thank you very much, Lieschen," she said, "but you must go home now, it is late." When the girl had left, she added, "It is the daughter of one of the neighbors, and I should have sent her away even if you had not come. In my condition one can never tell what may happen, and children are easily scared. Perhaps you will stay with me, Edwin?"

The professor sat down on the little stool and leaned his head against the bedpost.

"I shall stay with you, Tante Anna," he said. "Are you always alone?"

"As befits an old spinster," she answered with a smile. "Turn the lamp a little higher, so that I may better see your face. There—so this is little Edwin."

She had been his nurse and first teacher, without being in any way related to him. At first he had called her mother, then Tante Anna. Thus it had remained, and now a generation had passed.

"How glad I am to see you once more, my child," said Tante Anna after a pause. "I do not read the papers much, only a little now and then, but that you have become a great man I have learned nevertheless. True, it is not the way in which I had pictured it in your childhood."

"And how did you imagine my future?" he asked, smiling absent-mindedly.

"You always had many thoughts. Much that you said was childish, but much was very beautiful, just as in church. And you liked to get upon a chair, put on my large apron and preach a sermon."

The professor nodded.

"Now that you speak of it, I remember," he said. "If that was a way already, I have indeed departed from it, for can there be a greater difference than between a pastor and a physician?"

"The difference is not so great," said Tante Anna thoughtfully, "at least not in your case. You are an alienist, are you not, Edwin?"

"So people call me."

"Well, then you also seek to heal the diseases of the soul."

"The diseases of the mind, Tante Anna."

"Perhaps you call it by another name in science, but it is all the same."

"No," said the professor earnestly, "we seek the diseases in nervous disturbances and in the anomalies of brain structure. We find no soul there."

"What is the source of the disease, Edwin?"

"Sorrow, worry, sin, heredity."

"You have forgotten one," said the sick woman in a low voice, "it is despair. Do you not think, Edwin, that every one of us has his burden of grief and care? Do you think there is one among us that does not sin against his body? Why do hosts of them come to you?"

"It is the constant rush that is wearing them out."

"Why are they always rushing, child? Perhaps that they may the more quickly reach the end of this life and gain the next? It would be sinful, Edwin, but of this sin our age is guiltless. They are not rushing on from wastefulness, but from avarice. Do you see what I mean?"

The clock on the wall slowly ticked and in the wooden bedstead the woodworm was at work—no other sound could be heard.

"I too am ill," said the professor, suddenly.

A sad smile came over the features of the sick woman.

"Even if I did not love you as my own child, Edwin, I should have read that news before you spoke it. That is something we learn with age, even though our sight grows dim. You are suffering from a disease against which your own skill and science is powerless. Yes, you may even have contracted it from the very books you have studied. Do you know what it is?"

"I am sick of life," he said sullenly.

"Oh, yes, you can call it that, but that is only a result. Is it not strange that you should, in the very prime of life, and at the height of your career, honored by all who know you, be sick of the life that has brought you such fruits? If I, a poor, useless creature in this forsaken corner of the world, and on my sickbed, were sick of life, it would at least be intelligible; and yet you are what I am not. Can you explain this, Edwin?"

The learned man took a flower from the vase beside the little lamp and slowly and mechanically began to pluck out leaf after leaf. Without raising his eyes he said:

"Look, Tante Anna, that is our work. Day by day we remove a tattered rag from the gay covering of life in order to get at its heart. With some the process is rapid, with others slower, accordingly as nature has given to one a centifolia, to another a pansy. With all of them we come to the calyx, and it is empty."

He threw the naked stem away and leaned back his tired head.

After a pause the old lady said:

"Edwin, is it long ago that you lost your faith?"

"I cannot say that I ever had any, Tante Anna, for what a child believes is but a repetition of what others have said. Since I began to think for myself I have become convinced that all is over when this life ends, and science has confirmed this for me."

Again the old lady raised herself up as she said, somewhat faint-heartedly:

"My dear boy, I suppose you have never"—but he interrupted her roughly.

"I know what you want to say, it is the same old story. You wanted to ask whether I have ever prayed, did you not? You say your prayers will be heard if it is God's will, and that is all you know. For I can never know what an influence a prayer has upon its fulfillment, or whether the fact that it is not fulfilled is not a sign that I am addressing empty space. But it offers one comfort, Tante Anna, else I should be deceived in you. True, there is comfort for him who already believes. Whether this comfort comes from above, or arises within me, I cannot know; I have never seen the heavens torn asunder; but I know what power there is in a delusion. Do I not struggle against it every day; though it is the greatest relief imaginable for the incurables. What can you say to that, Aunt Anna?"

"Nothing," was the quiet answer, "for I see that I can do nothing for you and those like you in this way. One cannot measure all with the same yardstick, and so I shall not ask whether you have already searched your Bible."

"Because you already know the answer, Tante Anna. Prove to me that there is not one error in this Book from the first word of Genesis to the last one in Revelation, then I will believe. If you begin to omit what is human I demand the same privilege for me. No, you dear old soul, there is no use trying to help me. I must face with an open eye the night which you are so fortunate not to see, even though it finally falls to the lot of all."

The clock struck midnight, and Tante Anna's strength was apparently exhausted, for she reclined her head on the pillow and closed her eyes.

"You must sleep too, now, my darling," she said. "In the chamber next to this is an old sofa, and you will also find a cover. Take the lamp with you, the darkness does not matter to me."

For the first time he thought of asking what ailed her; he had been too deeply absorbed in the subject before.

"A lack of vitality," she answered smiling. "No doctor can help me. But you will stay here for a few days, will you not?"

"If you would like to have me, certainly, Tante Anna."

"It is not for my sake, child, but a thought just occurred to me. Do not ask me about it, if it is to be thus it will happen. Go and rest now, I shall knock when I need you."

"Have you nothing to read?" he asked, as he took the lamp; "my nerves are on edge, perhaps some written thing will help."

Her eyes turned to the Bible on the table, but she said nothing.—Hesitatingly he took up the worn volume and went into the other room.—But he did not read as he lay there upon the sofa, his head resting upon his hand; it was only an aimless turning of the leaves. And he felt that it was not helping him.

"Those who wrote this were only seeking what they did not know, just as we are," he said to himself. "When it was dark, they complained, and when it was light they rejoiced; we know indeed that light alternates with shadow. And when no light came, they were silent. On one page it says: 'I am become like a wine skin in the smoke.' On another: 'Even from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God.' Human uncertainty, human ideas! Sleep, what more do you want!"

He made the attempt, but was obliged to open his eyes again, to sleep was almost gruesome at this midnight hour.

He had turned the lamp very low and his eye gazed at an uncurtained window. Through it one could look out into the night upon the seemingly boundless plain, dimly lighted by the uncertain moonlight. A veil of mist passed by, and it made the pale moonlight appear still paler, and when the wind, which seemed to have gone to sleep, breathed deeply, it sighed through the Taxus hedge that bordered the little garden.

The professor thought of the mystic trees which the imagination of the ancients had planted around the river Styx, and in whose dark, mysterious branches there blew a ghostly wind, that could be heard but not seen.

"If the desire to live is so strong," he said, "then I can understand my fear of the last step. Life is sad, and death is mysterious—where is the way out in this confusion?"

And then it seemed as though a figure floated through the room. He saw no shadow and he heard no sound, but he felt the cool stir of a passing shape.

And then came a sound from the other room.

Edwin turned the lamp higher and went in. Placing the lamp at the head of the bed he bent low over the sick woman.

There was the hippocratic sign that he knew so well. Tante Anna lay with half open eyes, fingering the cover. It was the only sign of life, but almost immediately a few words passed her lips:

"You are there, Edwin?" she said.

"Raise my head a little, my breast feels so close, it has just come. Is there no more oil in the lamp? it burns so low."

"It is as usual, Tante Anna; do you not see the light?"

"It is very dim; you are a physician, is this death?"

"It may be death."

"Then God has fulfilled my wish. I wanted to die while you were here, Edwin."

"But I cannot help you, Tante Anna; you must go that way alone."

"Of course, dear, I do not mean that. But when you spoke those sad words a little while ago, they made me sad too. And then I thought—"

She had to pause for breath. The doctor held her head and begged her to say no more, but she waved her hand impatiently.

"The spell has passed, child, but the next one will overcome me. Yes, I thought, Edwin, that I could not help you with words, not with words. You can answer them with so many more, a thousand to one. But if a person should be very quiet, and if he—"

She made an effort and lifted her hand. Edwin bent his head forward to listen, she still breathed.

"Have you a last wish, Tante Anna?"

"No, now all is over. I see nothing, but I am fully conscious. Do you hear, Edwin, fully conscious—that is your hand, and these are the fingers of your hand. One—two—three—four—five—"

While she spoke she had very softly, as with a spirit's touch, laid her right hand upon his left, and he felt, with the sensitive touch of the physician that life was slowly ebbing away. And a question that he could not hold back, forced itself over his lips:

"Are you afraid now, Tante Anna?"

She had understood the question and she smiled as she slowly shook her head. "It is—very dark—and yet I—am not—afraid at all—no—not at all—"

no—" The last "no" was merely a fleeting breath, and the doctor arose and closed the sightless eyes.

It was very strange.—The learned man had stood at many a death-bed, but only in his sanatorium, never outside. Most of them had gone over in agony, many others in delirium. Not one like this woman. Fully conscious to the very last breath.

Suddenly the scales fell from his eyes. That was what she had wished and prayed for in her infinite love and care for him; she wanted to be to him that voice from the beyond which searching unbelief longs for and which—we know not why—we cannot hear.

Was that possible?

It was not possible to utter a falsehood in that last moment, even if it had been the falsehood of love. The hand of earthly love does not clasp ours to give comfort, but grasps and holds it to steady and hold itself.

It was not possible that a delusion should maintain itself up to the very threshold of death, for that which is merely customary and acquired is shed like the leaves of autumn as soon as every earthly basis ceases to exist.

Then the learned man felt the truth he had not been able to understand.

Edwin sat by the bedside wrapped in thought until the dawn of a new day. It was no longer merely a brooding born of the night, but it was as though a voice had spoken to the doubting Thomas: "Reach hither thy finger, and see my hands."

Then the sun rose over the moor and out of the fog. She has a long course to run until she reaches the west, and the man, too, to whom she sent her first rays, knew it full well.

The light does not shine round about us suddenly, nor does the sun rise to the zenith in an hour. But if we have seen the home of light, we may seek it even behind the clouds.

And yet another had found the path that led toward home,

Magic Glass in an Indian Village

By EMIL W. MENZEL

There probably isn't any material that lends itself better to creating magical effects than glass. The mere fact that in creating these magical effects with glass we go about it very scientifically doesn't alter the fact that the effects created are wonderful and surprising indeed. The writer took a few pieces of glass into an Indian village and set the town talking almost as much as the circus did when it came to town.

In India, microbes are even fiercer critters than in America. If people have the right to be scared of microbes and bugs in America, they have ten times as much reason for being scared of them in India. But the funny part of the story is, they are not even properly scared of them. When a man has smallpox, all his friends come to see him and sit on his bed to comfort him. (The Hindus actually congratulate him because he is favored by the very important matha devi or "mother goddess." In Hindi the word for smallpox means "mother.") Lepers roam at large; so do victims of trachoma, syphilis, contagious skin diseases, and "what have you." At the time of a cholera or plague epidemic those who have been exposed are not quarantined but flee from the "wrath to come," taking along with them, very likely, the cholera and plague bugs to start the epidemic in other villages. Attempt is being made to teach a different kind of respect for the everpresent microbe. Every hygiene reader in the school room contains pictures labelled "the plague carrier," "the malaria germ," "how T. B. is spread," or something similar. The public health department gets out posters with a rogue's gallery from the microbe underworld of public enemies No. 1, 2, 3, etc.

The thought came to me, "Why not take my microscope into the village and let people see that the invisible gangsters are also visible?" So we took our microscope along.

When we got to the village, the first question we asked school children and others was, "Where do you get your drinking water?" The answer was, "The village tank." (A village tank is a small artificial pond. This has been made by damming off a little valley or depression into which drainage flows during the rainy season. In our part of India, this tank constitutes almost the entire water supply for seven months of the dry season in about 80 percent of the villages. In some villages there is one pond for the people to get their drinking water from, and another for the cattle and people to go swimming in, and for dirty work. In some villages there is only one tank and the center is occupied all day by a herd of water buffaloes.)

Then we go off, with a whole crowd following, to the tank, carrying a glass jar or two. At the tank we are careful to take our water from a place near growing water grass. Here there are apt to be more water fleas, beetle larvae, snails, flatworms, rotifera, etc. We take care to get some green scum in also as this is composed of minute green plants floating in the water. Getting the water out of the tank of the particular village is an essential part of the ceremony, as we do not want to demonstrate a theory in biology, but to show that the drinking water of the people of this village is quite "lively."

Then we put a drop of water under the microscope. Again we are careful to see that we get the proper drop. There are many small water fleas and other animals, just barely big enough that the person who is used to looking for them can find them with the naked eye, but the uninitiated probably won't see them. Or we will take a little of the frowzy moss on the back of the snail. This is usually chuck full of minute little animalcules. The first person looks through the microscope suspiciously and doubtfully. We usually have to tell him to cover one eye with a hand and look with the other eye. Usually he hasn't any idea what he is looking at. But the little water flea or rotifer suddenly gives a kick and the looker catches on that it is alive and formidable looking. He lets out an exclamation that gets the rest of the crowd excited. We now have to line up the crowd to come one at a time. The report is around that there are strange creatures to be seen in that little drop of water from their pond.

The mosquito larva makes a good object to look at. We explain that this looks small with the naked eye but is a very large animal. The first one to look at it shouts, "It looks like a crocodile." Another opines that it's nothing less than a dragon.

Then we switch the objective of the microscope so that the larva becomes so big that only the head can be seen at one time. It is surprising to them that not only can we make a small animal look large but can choose just how large we want it to be. We have no trouble explaining now that although we are not showing them real microbes, with a more powerful glass such as cannot be used by people who have not had much practice in looking through the glass, we could show animals that are only a small fraction as large as those shown. They are willing to believe that there are elephants, camels, and buffaloes one millionth of an inch long in their water.

In the meantime, we let them pass a small hand magnifier around to look at their skin, finger nails, etc. This is another surprise, that one can magnify to such a small extent. We ask someone kindly to oblige us with the loan of a louse. There is a little searching and the louse is produced. It is then magnified to fierce proportions and finally offered to the original host for further bringing up if he cares to do so. This always produces a laugh.

Once the sadhu, or "holy man" came along right in the nick of time. This holy man had often assailed us because of our sinfulness, our sinfulness in eating the cow and our sinfulness in killing any animal at all for food purposes. This he had held up as the great sin, worse than adultery, robbery, manslaughter, or habitual lying and cheating. At this time we kindly invite him to take a look into the microscope. This he does warily, upon invitation No. 3. Then a young Hindu settles for us the old argument about never eating any meat.

The Hindu says, "Look! that's the water from our tank. Look at all we eat when we drink water."

I know that from now on the Sadhu can't argue that he doesn't eat meat. The only difference in his and my carnivorousness is the size of the animals we eat. But the sadhu is good-natured. He merely smiles as if to say, "Well, that argument we might consent to drop. I'll admit you have the advantage of me on that argument but we still agree to disagree." The Sadhu and I are friends despite the fact that we can't agree on what is sin and salvation.

Another sadhu was more wary. He refused to look because there might be something to disturb his beliefs. He says, "As long as I haven't seen anything it makes no difference. So I won't look."

In closing, we take up the hand glass once more and hold it so that concentrated sun rays fall upon a piece of paper. The paper begins to smoke and to burn. This is another surprise like unto magic. Many of them have heard that glass can produce fire, but seeing is more than hearing.

Sometimes I take along another piece of glass, of which I am more proud than of the microscope, namely the reflector from my reflector telescope. I am more proud of this piece of glass because it is partly a product of my own handiwork, made according to the directions given in The Scientific American. I don't often take this along because the telescope is big and clumsy and the things to be taught through it don't affect the people as much as the "bugs" that the microscope calls into being. But I do show it in schools sometimes.

We point at Venus shining so fair in the evening sky and ask, "What shape is that bright star?" They all agree "round." We point the telescope at it and reveal the lovely crescent shape of Venus when this planet is between us and the sun. They are surprised at the shape. They will not at first believe that it is Venus they are looking at, for, although the telescope points at Venus, the eyepiece is in the side of the telescope at right angles to it. They don't see how looking towards the south can show them a heavenly object shining in the west. Then we show them the prism in our telescope and soon prove to them that with a piece of magic glass it is quite possible to see things at right angles to the direction in which one is looking.

Next we look at Jupiter. Its four moons are visible. I explain to them that Jupiter is another object like our earth with several moons revolving about it. I ask the first boy who looks into the telescope what he has just seen and he answers, "One moon and four stars." I explain all over again that this is not the case. What they see is one earth and four moons. But until at least a dozen boys look through the telescope they insist that it is "one moon and four stars."

Next we look at Saturn with its rings. But why explain? The reader can never believe that so fair a piece of celestial poetry exists until he has himself looked at peacefully floating Saturn. Two of its moons are just barely visible. These are not mistaken for stars this time.

Two looks more for each of the swelling crowd. One look is at Antares, a beautiful double star, one of which is red and the other green. The other look is at the moon, just arising in the east. There is to be an eclipse of the moon at 2 a. m. and so the Hindu community is quite "moon-minded," for such an occasion calls for much ceremony, including a ceremonial bath at the time of the total eclipse. The telescope seems to have settled some argument between two of the lookers, for one exclaims to the other indignantly, "See, I told you there is no palm tree growing in the moon. You said there is." The palm tree in the moon enjoys the same standing in India as the man-in-the-moon in America in the days when the young weren't so sophisticated.

It is time to put up the telescope and go home. But just then several grown-ups arrive puffing from a good run, "Where is the show?" they ask.

Giving Thanks

BY LAURA EMILY MAU

*Dear heavenly Father, I thank thee
For quietness and sleep at night,
And for the moon and stars
That make the night so bright;
I thank thee for the morning light,
And for each day made new at night;
I thank thee for thy loving care,
And for a lovely home and friends;
I thank thee for so many things,
And for thy love which never ends.*

In the World's Most Ancient City

BY EUGENE W. NELSON

Every year trained scientists peel layer after layer of earth off of historic locations. They dig trenches and sink pits, all in the hope of finding ancient objects which will help them explain the world of today through the world of many yesterdays. For archaeologists, more than any other men, know the truth of the saying that "history repeats itself" and bend all their efforts to revealing the past in its true light so that eventually we may be able to steer a better course through our lives by profiting from the many mistakes made by the many nations that rose and fell in the long, long ago.

But an archaeologist's work is not as dull as it might sound from this statement. Many thrills are his, and not all of the thrills come from uncovering great treasures in gold and jewels, such as were found in the tomb of the Egyptian Pharaoh, Tut-ankhamen. Most of the thrills come from discovering a scrap of writing which will help fill in a blank space in history, or in starting a piece of excavating that does not look very promising and then having it turn out to be the prize of the year. The archaeologists from the University of Pennsylvania have been enjoying both of these thrills for a dozen years now, and expect to enjoy them for several more years to come.

It all started back in 1926 when Dr. E. A. Speiser, of Pennsylvania University, was given a roving commission to look over the country of Mesopotamia and locate the most promising archaeological site there. Now numerous archaeologists have been excavating for many years in Mesopotamia, for here is where Babylon, Ur of the Chaldees, Nineveh, and many other mighty cities of by-gone days were built and fell into ruins.

But Dr. Speiser did not bother to investigate any of the places where men had already dug; he was out to locate some entirely new place. The spot he finally chose was an enormous mound rising seventy feet above the flat, desert plains around it. So outstanding was this mound that for centuries the natives living in that section of Mesopotamia, which is just across the Tigris River from the ruins of Nineveh, called it Tepe Gawra, or "the great mound." Nobody knew any more about it. It was not until after Dr. Speiser had done a little preliminary digging that he became interested. A trial excavation in the very top of the mound revealed the ruins of a watchtower which had been garrisoned by Roman legions two thousand years ago when Rome's imperial eagle shadowed all the world.

To a person not wise in the lore of the ancient East, it might have been discouraging to find something a mere two thousand years old when searching for something twice that ancient. But to Dr. Speiser, a Roman tower on the top of a seventy foot mound was a promise of great things to come. He knew that in the very olden times the houses in Mesopotamia were built of mud bricks and did not last very long, that is, compared to the stone dwellings erected in other lands. When one of these mud-brick buildings went to pieces, the remains were leveled off and a new house was built on top of the old one. In time of war, entire cities would be destroyed only to have new cities built on them when peace came. So, as the centuries passed, a favorite town location would pile up and up until it had formed a mound of respectable size.

Such a mound Tepe Gawra proved to be, only more so! For the archaeologists working there it has been like slicing through a gigantic layer cake with each layer composed of a different civilization. So far, after more than a dozen years of work, the scientists have uncovered sixteen different cities, each one more ancient than the others on top of it. Each level, as the pick-wielders call a separate layer of civilization, had to be excavated individually. Then the layer had to be cleaned of all rubbish and studied in detail by the men who make this branch of archaeology their specialty. The architecture of the houses and temples was examined; jewels, ornaments, and tools were photographed; and a map of the town drawn. After all these jobs were completed, the village, which had been laid bare with so much labor, was utterly destroyed. Eventually the heavy rains would have washed away the mud-brick buildings and besides, the men had to make way for uncovering the next level.

In this manner the archaeologists have progressed through sixteen layers and they have been rewarded by some remarkable discoveries and surprises. The first few villages unearthed—although the most recently built—were made up of poorly-constructed and unattractive houses. The streets of these towns were narrow and crooked, too, although there were many tools and other objects of bronze and copper. But as the diggers went on down and down, the metal tools became more and more scarce. When the archaeologists reached the twelfth town, a thriving community of sixty centuries ago, they found themselves actually back in the Stone Age! There were a few ornaments of gold, but all tools and weapons were of stone since copper had not been discovered.

In this ancient Stone Age village, which was large enough for more than four hundred persons to live comfortably, evidence was discovered which proved that the people of this early date knew the art of weaving cloth for clothes. More, in a slender little stone vase was still a small amount of "kohl," a cosmetic which eastern women use to this day—a strangely modern touch to this town from another age.

Down, down, down went the archaeologists until they reached the sixteenth city. This is the most ancient town ever unearthed. As closely as Dr. Speiser can judge, this city was built about 4500 B. C., sixty-five centuries ago! But even here there are undeniable traces which prove that its people were not nearly so crude and barbaric as historians once thought they were at that time. The town itself, like city number twelve, was well planned. The houses were all attractive and strongly built, as were the two temples. The people evidently knew and enjoyed music, for numerous flute-like pipes were found in various parts of the town. They were artists, too, for their clay bowls and vessels were beautifully made and were as fine as modern porcelain. On the sides of some of these vases were painted what are probably the first landscape scenes in the world, graceful pictures of hunters stalking wild game on the bank of the Tigris River.

There are still at least six more cities so far untouched, lying beneath number sixteen. Each of them, as uncovered, will be given the title of the world's most ancient city, only to lose it as the next town is brought to light.

It is Dr. Speiser's great hope now that here on this one location he will be able to trace accurately and for the first time the full story of how people gave up the barbaric life of hunters, settled in towns, and then rose to civilization. If he can do this, then Dr. Speiser will have filled in, not just one blank spot, but an entire chapter in the history of humanity. This will surely be a most enviable achievement and one of world-wide interest.

Woodcarving in Switzerland

BY MARIE WIDMER

A year of famine, back in 1816, is held responsible for the birth of woodcarving in the Bernese Oberland, Switzerland. At the time Christian Fischer, a clever turner in the little village of Brienz, finding himself no longer able to buy the boxwood and horn necessary for fashioning the pipes for which he had already acquired a certain amount of fame, began experimenting with maple and other species of native wood. He made egg cups, napkin rings, goblets, plates and bread baskets and decorated them with simple carvings, the result being so pleasing to the eye that foreign visitors were eager to buy these articles. This initial success inspired Christian Fischer to further and more complicated efforts and he also gave free instruction to the peasants of Brienz who were so much in need of a side income.

The enthusiasm of the pupils was as great as the master's and with simple sharp knives they managed to sculpture articles which were typical of their environment. Their reproductions of animals and flowers were based on their own careful studies of nature.

Other Bernese Oberland communities, such as Meiringen, Lauterbrunnen and Grindelwald, also began to give attention to woodcarving as a home industry. Through the income from his wood sculptures, many a poor mountain peasant was able to banish want.

Presently Christian Fischer's remarkable pioneer work in this field was brought to the attention of the authorities. Both the Federal and the cantonal governments, as well as the village of Brienz and some neighboring localities, voted yearly subventions for the maintenance of a woodcarving school. The purpose of this institution, which was founded in 1860 and which is flourishing today, is to enable students to acquire a thorough practical and scientific training in the wood sculpture profession.

One of the primary conditions for admission is good eyesight. Moreover, new pupils are on probation for eight weeks to test their aptitude for drawing, which is a decisive factor. The apprenticeship for home and ornamental carvers is respectively two and three years. For animal and figure sculptors it is four years. At the end of these terms the students have to pass a state examination.

Tuition is free for Swiss citizens, as are also all the tools and working materials. Sculptures produced in the school are the property of the institution, but any articles which are not kept for the school collection, or otherwise claimed by the school, may be bought by the pupils for a small refund for materials.

An interesting feature of the woodcarving school at Brienz, which since 1928 is a special department of the Cantonal Industrial Museum in the city of Berne, is the small zoological park belonging to it. There students are able to make practical animal studies.

The products of the more advanced pupils are on sale in a special showroom, and exhibitions are also arranged occasionally to acquaint the public with the general activity of the institution.

A visit at Brienz is an experience which is as charming as it is enlightening. For who would not love at first sight a village of cozy brown chalets, with flowers blooming on every windowsill and balcony; a village which is mirrored in the mountain-enclosed

OUR CHURCH IN PICTURES

A graphic presentation of the many phases of work carried on in this country and throughout the world under the auspices of the Evangelical and Reformed Church

The Committee on Year Book and Almanac presents on the following pages a series of pictures of the work which you, as a member of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, are doing throughout not only our country but the far corners of the earth.

You have often heard the word "Apportionment," and perhaps to you it meant only some amount of money you felt you had to give in that "For Others" or "Benevolence" side of your weekly offering-envelope. Well, in the following picture pages we give you the Apportionment in terms of living men and women and of work being done by them and for them by the Evangelical and Reformed Church. These pictures are a picture of you—you when you reach out through gifts to missions, to education, and to other benevolences, and help our Church to do many things in many places for Christ's sake.

lake to which it has given its name, and whose background culminates in the Brienz Rothorn, one of the finest points of view in all Switzerland, accessible, of course, by a mountain railway!

Things assume an exciting aspect as soon as one arrives at Brienz, for Switzerland's woodcarving capital flaunts the most attractive road signs to be found anywhere. Most appropriately they are carved in wood, and their designs vary cleverly according to their location. Thus the road sign pointing the way to the Chamois Park is surmounted by replicas of two of these nimble animals; the road sign to the landing place for steamers bears a quaintly garbed traveler, receiving road directions from a little boy; a portly tourist, preceded by an equally corpulent little dog, surmounts the sign directing to the Rothorn; and a sprightlier little man, equipped with all the hiker's paraphernalia, is headed for Axalp. Ultra smart is a feminine figure with a beautiful hound, looking in the direction of Fluhberg Pavilion. Woodcarving at Brienz has experienced a glorious evolution. More and more the artisan is vanishing, and the artist comes to the fore. One of the foremost masters in wood-sculpture nowadays is Hans Huggler, who recognized long ago that it was more important to catch the spirit and expression of a model than to reproduce it. In a series of bold strokes and slashes, a simple arrangement of planes and angles, he brought a block of wood to instant and vigorous life that it could never acquire through the careful modelling of the old school. Then he began his character sketches that are now familiar to every tourist who visits Switzerland. With the keenest understanding and affection he carved these little men and women, and painted them roughly in the dull, beautiful colors of the home-dyed stuffs the peasants wear. In these Lilliputian woodcarved figures many people of Brienz and environs recognized themselves and their neighbors with conscious pride, for while their fellow townsman recreated them, he did it with a touch so whimsical and so kindly that he never gave offense.

But the "little people" are only a part of Hans Huggler's artistic creations. He, too, has caught and preserved with his magic chisel the animal and wild life of his world, but in a striking way all his own.

Then there is Karl Binder, also a native of Brienz, who in 1908, at the age of twenty-three, was urged by Rodin, Bartholomé and Desbois to exhibit in the Salon National des Beaux Arts in Paris. A sculpture "Ivresses" earned him the title of associé, and only one year later another creation "The Bagpiper" elevated him to the rank of Sociétaire in the Beaux Arts Society, a distinction equalling a gold medal. Several of Karl Binder's wood sculptures have been acquired by the city of Paris, and in other lands his works are equally admired.

Another gifted Brienz artist is Emil Thomann, whose noble sculptures of ecclesiastical subjects have received most favorable comment.

In addition to the displays of the before-mentioned works of art in wood, the little village is literally alive with wooden bears in every size and every conceivable attitude—bears inviting you to entrust your hat or umbrella to them, or both; bears eager to do duty as a seat; bears holding smokers' accessories, etc. Chamois, deer, eagles, cows and goats are introduced in ever so many clever combinations, while chalets of different sizes are ready to serve in numerous ways. Bread-baskets, book racks, paper knives, ink wells, salad sets, bowls, clocks and pictures lend further variety to the displays, so that a visit in Switzerland's woodcarving capital is not only instructive, but a rare visual delight.

Salt of the Earth

BY ELIZABETH STEWART

The salt we so carelessly sprinkle on our food has one of the most interesting and romantic backgrounds of any product we use.

Its part in the lives, the loves and the hates of man runs back to the very dawn of history. It has caused wars and rebellions. It has led men into adventures and discoveries that have altered history and aided the advance of civilization; for salt is one of life's necessities.

In the early Stone Age when men first banded together in tribes, his needs were simple. All he required was food and shelter, but he also had to have salt.

Because of this vital necessity, the location of natural salt deposits had a great deal to do with the migrations of those savage tribes. Natural salt mines or springs were found in widely separated localities and man was forced to live close to them. Once located near a salt lick, his food supply came to him; for animals, too, were drawn there and bitterly contested man's possession.

Early man first found his precious supply along the shores of inland salt seas. There he learned that accumulated pools of salt water were evaporated by the sun's rays until crude crystals were formed. It is recorded that many thousands of years ago, along the edge of the Dead Sea in Palestine, shallow salt basins or evaporating flats were the natural factories that produced most of the salt used in biblical times.

During the glory of the Roman Empire one of the greatest military roads in history, the Via Salaria, or Salt Road, was constructed. This famous highway, which is still in existence, was built by the Roman soldiers so salt could be more easily moved from Ostia near the Mediterranean to Rome. The product was considered so valuable that the Roman government maintained at all times an extra heavy military guard over this highway.

Salt was used as a medium of exchange just as gold and silver are today. Caesar's soldiers received part of their pay in common salt. This was known as their salarium, and from that ancient Latin word came our own word "salary."

Haven't you heard the expression "The man isn't worth his salt"? That comes from that time too, when men received compensation in salt and means, of course, that he isn't worth his pay. On the other hand when we hear someone spoken of as the "salt of the earth," it means he is of a fine, reliable character. But when we accept something with a "grain of salt," we express doubt. Curious, isn't it, how salt affects even our language?

In Abyssinia, until fairly recently, salt was the coin of the realm. Small tablets of it were called amoulies and were worth about a cent of our money. Even now, some of the South Sea Islanders use "salt money." In the interior, the people rarely get to the coast and are eager to barter for salt.

The people of India, in recent years, have complained bitterly against the salt tax levied by the British government, and led by Mahatma Gandhi produced their own from the sea water of the Indian Ocean. This uprising nearly resulted in a war.

In our own country, during the Civil War, one of the purposes of General Burbridge's expedition into southwestern Virginia was to capture Saltville, one of the South's chief sources of salt.

The most famous salt mine in the world is located at Wieliczka, Poland.

Its history is closely linked with that of the country, for it has been the scene of many battles. The mine is noted because it is the first rock-salt mine on record and is the largest one in the world. Tourists flock there, for hewn out of the solid salt deep in the earth is a complete chapel. Once its walls were dazzling white, but now smoke from countless candles has darkened them.

In 1772, after a fierce battle, the mine came into possession of the Austrian government, but during the Great War, Poland regained it and it has belonged to her ever since.

From every corner of the globe come myths and superstitious beliefs about salt. In Finnish mythology we read that Ukko, mighty god of the sky, struck fire in the heavens. A spark from this blaze fell into the ocean and turned to salt.

In parts of the Far East the natives give their children little bags of salt to hang around their necks to protect them from the "Evil Eye."

In Russia no bride or groom will enter their new home without first throwing salt in all corners. This, they believe, will insure them health and happiness.

Hungarian peasants sprinkle salt on the doorsteps of a new house to keep out evil spirits. In Japan, it is used in a sacrificial rite, and in China in a New Year's festival.

The Greeks and Romans used it in their sacrifices and considered the spilling of salt an evil omen. Even Leonardo da Vinci's immortal painting, "The Last Supper," shows this superstition. For in front of the traitor Judas is an overturned salt-cellar, sign of impending evil. This belief has continued to the present day and it is not unusual to see someone, who has spilled salt at the table, pick it up and carefully toss it over his left shoulder! And what small child hasn't tried to sprinkle salt on a bird's tail?

Strange as it seems, London owes its birth to the salt traffic that was carried on with the Continent in the earliest days of history. In those days Worcestershire furnished the salt and the salt route traversed England and crossed the Thames at a ford where now stands Westminster.

Then the Thames was often too swollen for the pack-trains to cross, so they camped and waited. As a result a fortified village sprang up, and that village has grown into the world's greatest metropolis—London.

It was in early England that salt was considered of such importance that it was used to determine the order of seating people at the table. A large vessel filled with salt was placed in the center of the table and all those of noble birth were seated above it. So one could easily tell a man's station in life by noting whether he sat above or below the salt.

In London to this day, at periodical dinners of the Guild of Innholders, a large salt-cellar on the table divides the Court from the Livery.

At the present time salt is obtained in two ways, by evaporation of brine, and by mining rock salt. Brine is of two kinds: brine from wells, and surface brine. The surface brine comes from sea water or salt lakes. Brine from wells is natural, or artificially made by pumping water into wells that have been drilled into rock-salt deposits. The salt from surface brine is usually obtained by the natural evaporation, while salt from brine wells is obtained by artificial evaporation.

The oldest salt mine in the Western World, is at Avery Island, La. It has the thickest vein of salt yet discovered. Drills have been sunk 2,200 feet without going through the solid salt.

Few realize the tremendously important part salt plays in our lives. It is essential in industry, agriculture and medicine and has been for thousands of years.

The Wandering Potato

BY MABEL ANSLEY MURPHY

In an English garden on Broadway, New York, one morning early in June, 1720, a new flower blossomed. Every passerby stopped to look at the clusters of yellow stamens, peering out from deep green foliage. "Pretty," commented a sturdy Dutch wife on her way to market. "Where did you get it, Neighbor Lane?"

"My sister-in-law in New Hampshire sent me two tubers. She brought some over with her from Londonderry, Ireland. She says that shortly after the flower dies, we will find that the two tubers have become many and that we may use them for food."

Vrow Stuyvert shook her head. "Be careful, Neighbor Lane," she admonished. "'Tis said that the poor starving bodies in Ireland are so desperate that they eat most any kind of roots. But what do you call this plant?"

"The potato. And dear Vrow Stuyvert, my sister writes that it has long been in use in Ireland. She says that over one hundred years ago Sir Walter Raleigh found the Indians of Virginia using them. They said that the tubers had come to them in the days of their fathers from very, very far south. He brought the tubers over to England. But it was left to the Irish to find how delicious they are when baked or boiled."

As a matter of fact, Raleigh did not introduce to Europe the tuber we know as the Irish potato. Nor did Sir Francis Drake—even though in Offen-berg, Germany, the inscription below his statue reads:

SIR FRANCIS DRAKE

Introducer of the Potato into Europe
In the Year of our Lord 1580

Botanists know better. They tell us that no one knows exactly who did bring the potato from Peru to Europe, for its native home was Peru, not Virginia. Dried, it was the food of all Indians living in regions too high to grow corn. It still is their food. In Peru many varieties of potatoes are fertilized and irrigated.

Whoever brought it across the Atlantic left it in Spain. But not until it finally reached the botanical gardens of Vienna did its culture spread. It was long cultivated for its flowers—Marie Antoinette wore them in her hair.

It was Ireland who discovered the food value of the potato. Norman Taylor, the botanical editor of Webster's New International Dictionary, tells us that "priests and altar boys marched up and down their fields drenching the crop with holy water."

In the United States, it was the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians from Londonderry who really started the culture of the potato. Ireland's history, however, has been more closely connected with the potato than has that of any other country. It was the failure of the potato crop in Ireland in 1846 which started the great wave of Irish emigration to the United States. In a few years nearly two millions had found homes here. Later, the potato blight spread to Germany and Poland, and the youth in those countries also turned to the United States as a haven of refuge.

How We Got Our Bibles

BY KEN F. HUGHES

Once it took a lifetime to turn out a copy of the Bible! Today with the modern printing press, it could be done in less than one day.

That is because of the great progress of writing and making books. The ancient people of Asia had only the clay tablets for their books! Upon these tablets they drew pictures to tell the stories found in the Old Testament of our Bible. The clay was soft. It was easy to write in it with blunt instruments. But when the clay dried, it became brittle and easily broken.

No one tried to find something better to write upon until the Egyptians began to want better material for writing. The Egyptians were educated better than most people of old times. They wrote more. They needed much better writing material.

Along the Nile River in Egypt was a reed-like plant called papyrus. It was thick along the banks of this long river. Egyptians learned to use the inner bark of this plant which was called bylos. It was from this word, bylos, that we took the word for Bible!

After the inner bark was pressed out and cut into thin strips, it was heated. This made the strips stick together in a narrow page.

But only two columns could be written upon this narrow page. Drawing pictures to tell a story took up much space. Something had to be done about the narrow pages. Thus the Egyptians began to use small symbols in writing. Probably you did not know that these symbols were called alphabet by the Greeks. This was the first alphabet! Just as the A, B, C's are our alphabet today.

Besides using these symbols to write smaller, the Egyptians began to search for something to replace papyrus paper. They discovered how to tan and prepare the skins of animals. This material is called leather, today. But then it was parchment if made from sheepskin, and vellum if made from calfskin. But parchment was the most popular of the two. It was a little tougher than vellum. These tanned skins were scraped so they could be used over and over again.

Papyrus paper was fixed in rolls. It took many rolls to write all the Old Testament upon. These rolls were hard to carry around too. But it did not take the Egyptians long to make pages for a book. These tanned hides would make large pages. They could be folded twice and cut again for smaller pages. Lines could be ruled upon the parchment of vellum with a blunt instrument. Two to four columns could be put on each page now!

Because parchment could stand rough treatment and use, it was used for Bibles. Egyptians were followed by the Hebrews who learned to use another kind of symbols which they called Hebrew. But Hebrews wrote more for the Bible than did the Egyptians. They put about everything that happened in their Bibles.

But few peoples could read or speak Hebrew. Latin was the language of the educated scholars, monks and rich men. Jerome, a monk, who could read Hebrew and Latin both, translated the Bible into his language, Latin. Monks knew Latin in this fourth century better than anyone else. It was spoken in the churches. At this time, the churches were always crowded. Jerome's Bible was accepted by the churches.

Jerome made it possible for all the monks to read the Bible! They did not have to know Hebrew as he did. They could read and understand a Latin Bible. Then the monasteries began to take new interest in the Bible. Beautiful copies were made in gold, silver and rich purple colors upon the ivory parchment. Bibles were so carefully made that one man spent his entire lifetime making a complete copy.

Irish monks made fancy cases for their Bibles. Books became more like the books we know now, with bound and decorated covers. Italy and France took such interest in making the most beautiful books; each tried to do better than the other. Thousands of expert workmen worked, doing nothing but making the Bibles.

But few persons could buy these jeweled Bibles. It was John Gutenberg, from Mainz, Germany, who learned to use the wooden blocks for printing cheaper Bibles. One letter made one block. Gutenberg printed his first book, a Bible, in 1456. It had 641 leaves, with two columns to one page. Then he learned to use metal for printing blocks. Gutenberg grew excited! He printed 100 copies of the Bible with metal type. Fifty copies were printed on vellum. The other fifty copies were printed upon a new material called "paper." It had been discovered and used in Germany for the first time for printing books! Paper was liked best. But it was not good paper until it was developed by scientists. In the fifteenth century eighteen countries were printing Bibles!

These Bibles were sold at high prices. Not more than 200 copies were printed at one time. Churches, royalty and rich persons bought them. A poor man could not buy a Bible yet!

Martin Luther thought there should be a Bible for the rich and poor alike. He wrote a Bible in the German language from the Latin Bible. Then a group called Waldensians put the Latin into French and made a Bible for France. John Huss copied a Bible into Czech for his country of Bohemia. Wycliff, who was an English scholar, made an English copy of the Latin Bible. Thus almost everybody could own and read a Bible.

England became excited about books and Bibles. Books were printed by hand. Caxton brought the first printing press to England in 1470.

King James took up the fight! It was 1604. Fifty-four scholars were ordered to make a Bible for the English people in one complete book. These scholars divided into three groups at Oxford, Cambridge and Westminster. Six years were required to complete this version of the Bible. A man named Barker is supposed to have printed this "King James" Bible. It was issued in 1611 and named after the English king of that time. People liked the short simple words. They could read this Bible without trouble. They knew what the words meant.

After America was settled it used the "King James" Bible. But gradually our language changed and Americans wanted a Bible written for Americans. Two groups of scholars revised the King James version. In 1885 the American Standard version was finished. But the language in this version is no longer as clear to us as it was to past generations, so scholars such as Weymouth, Goodspeed and Moffatt, have prepared modern language versions.

Thank You, Father

BY ESTHER FREIVOGEL

For flowers growing in the grass,
That nod to people when they pass,
Thank you, Father, thank you.

For birds that sing their songs so gay,
And help us have a happy day,
Thank you, Father, thank you.

For sunset with its colors bright,
For stars that twinkle in the night,
Thank you, Father, thank you.

What the World Needs from the Church

BY PAUL S. LEINBACH

In the book, Science and Life, written by that eminent Christian scientist, Dr. Robert A. Millikan, appears this pregnant passage: "The purpose of science is to develop without prejudice or preconception of any kind a knowledge of the facts, the laws and the processes of nature. The even more important task of religion, on the other hand, is to develop the consciences, the ideals and the aspirations of mankind. But science and religion alike are misinterpreted by men who lose sight of all spiritual values and therefore exert an influence upon youth which is unsettling, irreligious and sometimes immoral."

Fundamentally, this seems to answer the question proposed. The trouble with the world is that it has a false philosophy of life. It is groping blindly in the dark. It is without compass or guide. It has lost the way. Especially, it has lost God.

When Jesus saw the multitude, he had compassion on it. Crowds of men moved Him deeply because they were as sheep not having a shepherd. They were like children crying in the night, like infants crying for the light, and with no language but a cry. How could these poor, wandering souls have a true sense of life's deepest values? They needed to know the truth which alone could make them free, free from error, superstition, false propaganda and whatever deceives the mind and deludes the heart of man.

What the world needs from the Church, therefore, is a conscience. This is the greatest task in which men can be engaged—to develop the consciences, the ideals and the aspirations of their fellow men, to light the fires of the human spirit, to set men's hearts upon God. If that is the task of religion, it is the main business of the Church. If the world gets that leadership, that inspiration, that enthusiasm from the Church, it will get what it most needs.

Home

Keep the home near heaven. Let it face toward the Father's house. Not only let the day begin and end with God, with mercies acknowledged and forgiveness sought, but let it be seen and felt that God is your chiefest joy, His will in all you do the absolute and sufficient reason. —James Hamilton

In the homes of America are born the children of America; and from them go out into American life, American men and women. And only as these homes are what they should be, will they be what they should be.

The sweetest type of heaven is home—nay, heaven is the home for whose acquisition we are to strive the most strongly. Home, in one form and another, is the great object of life. It stands at the end of every day's labor, and beckons us to its bosom; and life would be cheerless and meaningless, did we not discern across the river that divides us from the life beyond, glimpses of the pleasant mansions prepared for us.

The pleasant converse of the fireside, the simple songs of home, the words of encouragement as I bend over my school-tasks, the kiss as I lie down to rest, the patient bearing with the freaks of my restless nature, the gentle counsels mingled with reproofs and approvals, the sympathy that meets and assuages every sorrow, and sweetens every little success—all these make me feel as if I had once lived in heaven, and, straying, had lost my way.—J. G. Holland.

Birds — the World's Greatest Travelers

BY MARY L. CAIRNS

Birds in flight, during the seasons of migration, travel hundreds and sometimes thousands of miles to their destinations, and their routes are marvelously accurate. It has been noted by careful observers that they arrive and depart from a place on almost exactly the same date year after year. Often they can be counted upon to arrive at very near a certain hour. A route of migration, once having been established, is seldom changed.

Even the smallest of birds—the red-throated hummingbird—flies from its summer home in North America to its winter home in Central America as fearlessly and dauntlessly as many of the larger birds. These little birds, a mere three inches in length, take off from Florida and traverse the Gulf of Mexico to Central America. Sometimes they face great odds. Often large numbers of them are blown against lighthouses or jagged rocks, where they are dashed to death. But in spite of all danger they bravely go forth year after year.

It is known that birds which summer in the Rocky Mountains and in the regions to the west of them are not such great travelers as those of the eastern part of the United States. Many birds that nest in the higher parts of the Rockies merely change altitude for the winter months, and winter in the warm valleys. Sometimes a ranger in the Rocky Mountain National Park, in Colorado, while patrolling parts of the park, comes across hundreds of robins wintering in protected valleys. In Denver, robins have been seen as early as February 11. It is more than possible that each year a few of these birds fail to join their companions in a southern flight.

Some birds, such as the ptarmigan of the high Rockies and the arctic region, adapt themselves to their locality by changing color from one season to another. Thus, in summer, we find them a mottled gray-brown and white, blending in with the rocks and scattered snow banks of summertime in high altitudes. But in winter, when snow has covered the entire landscape, each feather of these lovely birds has become pure white.

Travelers making winter ski trips over the high mountains often wonder where the ptarmigan procures its food when snows have piled to a depth of many feet. But in these regions as well as in the Far North, blizzards have proven a blessing to these birds, for the high winds keep the feeding grounds swept free of snow.

White robins and white bluejays—sometimes referred to as albinos—are spoken of as freaks of nature, and it is not thought that their plumage is colorless as a protection, as in the case of the ptarmigan. One such bluejay was seen recently, accompanied by a normally colored mate, in an apple orchard near Pittsfield, Massachusetts. It was described as being dusty white with a dark streak running back from the eye to the darker tail feathers.

In June, 1933, a white robin visited Denver, Colorado. She was a mother-bird, and was of normal size. Except for a few grayish-brown feathers, her entire plumage was white. The Mission Indians have a superstition that the appearance of a white robin near one's home is a good omen and brings luck to whoever is fortunate enough to see it.

Why birds feel the urge to brave all dangers to travel great distances over land and sea is a mystery that has never been solved. How they have learned that they must not remain through changing seasons in the place where they were born, where, of necessity, most of them would perish, is something that we do not understand. But it is interesting to note, each year, the preparations that the birds make for journeying.

Each summer, soon after the nesting season is over, the birds begin to shed their feathers, by molting, and then to acquire a new traveling outfit. In many species of birds, such as the blue bunting and the scarlet tanager, the bright colored plumage is changed to a sober brownish hue for the migration. This is a protection against malicious enemies, and doubtless saves many lives.

Some birds travel by night, others by day. Often birds of various species travel together, as if they feel that there is safety in numbers, and that a large flock would be better able to protect themselves against enemies and storms than a small one. Among birds that travel in such flocks are warblers, wrens, and kinglets. During migration many of these small land birds encounter terrific windstorms in which they are blown far out to sea, where they become exhausted and lose their lives by falling into the merciless waters.

The paths of bird migration have been observed for many years; and bird banding, the process of fastening an identification band upon a bird's leg, has led to the accumulation of a vast amount of data regarding their travels.

In 1932 a warbler, caught in a harmless trap in a tree by a man in Kingman, Kansas, was banded with a U. S. biological survey band on its leg, and then released. Early in 1933 word was received from Washington that this little warbler, his band intact, had been found in South Africa, 10,000 miles from the point of his release.

Carrier pigeons have long been noted for their accurate flights, and have been relied upon as messengers for hundreds of years. They, too, fly great distances. In 1933 a carrier pigeon attempted to fly through the window of a home in Bellingham, Washington. Finding this impossible, it entered through an open door. On one leg was a band inscribed "CEZ, Porterdale, Georgia." It had traveled all those miles over mountains, plains, and lakes, without mishap.

Perhaps the most traveled of all birds is the arctic tern. All through the northern summer the tern lives in the Arctic region; and when this season begins to draw to a close the tern begins its long flights southward. He flies as far south as the Antarctic region, where he again enjoys continuous summer and daylight.

Weather Wisdom

By CHARLES CLAY

When an Austrian peasant wants to know if he can successfully undertake some agricultural work, he goes down into the cellar and puts his ear to his vinegar barrel. If he hears a faint bubbling noise, he can be sure that there is going to be a change in the weather, and he can plan accordingly.

Man everywhere is, of course, persistently curious about the weather of tomorrow, and he attempts to forecast it in many strange ways. He watches the sunset, and is pleased if it is a bright red, for he recalls the old saying, "Red sun at night is shepherd's delight"; he watches the stars, and if they twinkle rapidly, he knows he can expect wind.

These and other aspects of weather lore are, however, not absolutely scientific. Man has always looked for something more reliable. And the best thing he has made to date is the barometer.

This instrument was first made in 1643 with a glass tube of mercury, graduated so as to show how the mercury "rose" and "fell." But of recent years, a tight elastic metal box, so made that it expands and contracts under air pressure, thus indicating "rising" and "falling," is taking the place of mercury barometers. It is called an aneroid ("not wet") barometer. Both it and the mercurial barometer work on the same principle, however,—a principle that is really very simple when once understood.

We commonly use the expression "light as air" as though air were practically weightless, but on examination we find that a cubic foot of air weighs about .08 pounds. Thus, the air in a room 60 feet by 30 feet by 15 feet would weigh more than a ton. Because it has weight, the air naturally will exert a pressure upon any object with which it is in contact, and we find that the average pressure of the atmosphere at sea level is about 15 pounds per square inch. Of course, we do not feel this on our bodies, because it presses equally on all sides of us.

It is this "pressure of the atmosphere" that the barometer measures, but instead of measuring in pounds per square inch, it measures the atmosphere pressure in terms of inches of mercury. Thus, if the barometer reading is 30 inches, it means that the pressure of the atmosphere is the same as the pressure of a column of mercury 30 inches in height. And this traditional barometrical reading is preserved in the aneroid barometers.

But to continue our explanation of how a barometer works. Barometer readings are continually changing, due to changes in the pressure of the atmosphere. For instance, warm air rises thus lessening the pressure on the barometer, and causing it to "fall." But we know that this lower warm air contains moisture, and when it strikes the upper cooler air it condenses, and falls as precipitation. Therefore we associate a "falling" barometer, one that drops below 29.5 inches, with rain or snow and storms.

And, conversely, when the upper cool air falls and increases the pressure on the barometer, it causes the mercury to "rise." And since we know that the cool dry air, descending to lower levels becomes warm and balmy, we associate a "rising" barometer with clear skies and fair weather.

One says "forecasts" because there is a lag between actual pressure readings and weather changes. From the time a barometer "falls" to the coming of rain, some 8 to 15 hours may elapse, depending upon the geographical location and upon the direction of the winds. In like manner, from the time a barometer "rises" to the coming of good weather, a similar 8-15 hour lapse is to be expected. Fast barometer movements usually indicate quick changes, slow movements retarded changes.

In Europe the barometer has a place in the home equal in importance to that of the clock. And this continent is gradually learning to value it as much. Its importance as a probable indicator of the weather conditions in the immediate future makes it a good forecaster about whether the potatoes can be dug up tomorrow, or whether to cut that grain, or what will be needed for school wear!

Mountains of Palestine

BY EVALINE JORDAN

Mountains, the emblem of strength, have always played an important part in the life of mankind. Men have lost their lives attempting to scale their heights. Astronomers search out those with clearest air about their summits upon which to place their telescopes for studying the heavens.

John Ruskin, the English writer, tells us of the three great offices which mountain ranges are appointed to fulfill in order to preserve the health and increase the happiness of the peoples of the earth. Their first office, is to give motion to water; their second, to maintain constant change in the currents and nature of the air, and their third, to cause perpetual change in the soils of the earth.

Mountains, with their vast immensity and great rugged heights reaching above the clouds, are awe-inspiring and awaken within us a keener realization of God's great power.

Many of the mountains of Palestine were looked upon as sacred by the people of early Bible times, and on down through Christ's time. They were compared in might and power to God's love for mankind.

Sinai, the mountain upon which the law was given to Moses is an enormous block of granite. It is said that the first impression one has of this mountain is sublime. And that the solemnity and grandeur of this towering rock would be impressive under any circumstances, but as a perfect setting for the story of Moses and the law it gives an awe-inspiring and fascinating sight.

One of the lower peaks of Sinai is named Mount of the Willows, and is claimed by some Bible students to be the mountain where Moses cut his rod. Dr. Fosdick says of this mountain that it is the most sightly one he has ever seen. And that the surrounding heights, like Sinai itself are granite massifs and barren multi-colors with dark purples, reds, browns, scarlets and greens, as the sunlight changes on the various blends of rock.

We pass from the beauties of Sinai and turn to the Mount of Olives which is interesting because it touches the lives of so many well-known Bible characters. One of its peaks, the Mount of Offence, is named from a late tradition, identifying it with a scene of Solomon's idolatry (1 Kings, 11: 7). Another peak, Veri Galilaei, received its name from an old belief that the men of Galilee stood here when addressed by the two men in white apparel (Acts 1: 10).

On the slopes of the other peak may be seen the village of Siloam, and ancient, rock-cut sepulchers which are known as the Tombs of the Prophets.

The Mount of Olives is mentioned much in the New Testament in connection with Christ's life, especially in the last days of His life. He crossed it on His entry into Jerusalem, and upon it, He delivered his eschatological address (Mark 13: 3). It was here, near the bottom of the Kidron Valley, that the Garden of Gethsemane is supposed to have been.

With a feeling of reverence in our hearts we turn from this scene to the Lebanon range. Lebanon, meaning "to be white," is so called because of the snow that covers its summit the greater part of the year; some claim that it is named Lebanon because of the whiteness of its cliffs. The scenery of Lebanon is very beautiful. We know that many of the Old Testament writers mention it with poetical reference: "The flowers of Lebanon"; "The glory of Lebanon." Much is made of the "cedars of Lebanon"; also the "Tower of Lebanon," and Solomon's royal "House of the Forests of Lebanon" (1 Kings 7: 2). The Lebanon range furnished the cedars for Solomon's Temple, that wonderful building so minutely described in the Book of Kings. No mention is made of Lebanon in the New Testament.

Lebanon has three rocky knolls rising from its summit. The highest of these is Mount Hermon (9,166 feet,) from which the view is said to be very extensive, overlooking all the Lebanon range from the plains east of Damascus. "On its south slopes," Dr. Fosdick tells us, "are the remains of a small temple and a trench in the rock that is thought to mark the site of an ancient altar." And among many other interesting ruins to be found on Lebanon is an old wall of good masonry built around one of the peaks. The Lebanon range might well be called the Twin Range, for in reality it is two ranges separated by the valley of Lebanon.

We now come to Mount Tabor, which, as one traveler describes it; "Rises up to heaven like an altar that the Creator built to himself." And as another says: "The view from this mountain looking southwest toward Mount Carmel, across the plains of Esdraelon, the great battlefield of history, is one long to be remembered."

There is another view from this mountain that is not without interest, that of the Arab village of Endor, where long ago lived the famous witch of Bible times to whom Saul went to have his fortune told (1 Sam. 28: 7). This little village was situated about four miles south of Mount Tabor, and Saul passed here on his way home after Samuel had anointed him.

It was upon Mount Tabor that the fearless Deborah, with the aid of Barak, gathered her army and led it down into the plains against the offending Canaanites and won the battle so vividly described in chapter four of the Book of Judges.

Across the plains from Mount Tabor is Gilboa, where Gideon defeated the Midianites, and where Saul and Jonathan died together. To the west is Kishon, the brook where Elijah slew the priests of Baal. It was at this same place, after many centuries, that the Crusaders fought.

As we leave Palestine we must not forget Mount Nebo. Nebo is the best known peak in the Abarim range in the northwest part of Moab, and towers four thousand feet above the Dead Sea. From this altitude one can view the whole length of Palestine. It was from this mountain Moses viewed the promised land just before his death.

There is pathos in the closing chapter of Moses' life on Mount Nebo, and Mrs. C. F. Alexander must have felt something of this when she wrote that beautiful poem, "The Burial of Moses."

*By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab,
There lies a lonely grave.*

The Curse of Marihuana

BY HAROLD GIBB

Outside an imposing school building in a far western city a stranger accosted two boys returning to the classroom after lunch.

"I'm selling a special brand of cigarettes, fellows," the man told them. "How'd you like to try some? They cost only a little more than well-known brands, and I'm sure you'll find them very good."

The boys did find them good—too good, in fact, for their health. For those cigarettes, put up in neat packages without the regulation government stamp required by law, were made from marihuana, a form of dope that is spreading its tentacles throughout the country more rapidly than most people have any idea. Educators, churches and welfare organizations are battling this menace which has cast its sinister shadow over the realm of boyhood. But more recruits are needed in this crusade against narcotics if such traffic is to be stamped out.

Marihuana, called "Mary Warner" in the waterfront of America's great seaports, is a plant native to Mexico which was introduced into the United States some years ago. It grows readily with scant water or cultivation and thrives in the shade of larger forms of vegetable life. Growers of the weed use harmless bushes as a screen to keep marihuana from the prying eyes of the public; thus discovery by authorities is virtually impossible.

From time to time state and municipal authorities do confiscate quantities of marihuana, but the traffic thrives beyond all belief, growing larger every year. Today, hundreds of men and women make an illegal livelihood from cultivation and sale of the product which law enforcement officers have sworn to eradicate and to which they have given their best efforts.

Perhaps the most dangerous feature of marihuana, in contrast to better-known forms of dope such as, opium, morphine and heroin, is the ease with which it may be obtained. Cigarettes made from the crushed leaves of the plant sell so cheaply that children can buy them for little more than they would pay for a bag of candy. Peddlers of this form of dope frequent school districts and places where students "hang out" after hours. In such areas they do quite a thriving business.

There are several reasons why such inhuman beasts emphasize their product to youth. First, youngsters are more gullible and reckless. They lack worldly wisdom and are usually willing to try anything once. In the case of marihuana that "once" is often enough to start them in the vicious habit. Second, boys and girls are less likely to tip off authorities regarding sales. Third, by getting young "customers" marihuana salesmen assure themselves a profitable business for many years. Breaking the habit is difficult, if not impossible. Marihuana smokers become steady patrons of the peddlers after one or two indulgences.

Effects of marihuana smoking are quite similar to those produced by better known kinds of dope. The indulger finds himself in a world of dreamy unreality—a world in which his cares seem to vanish like a puff of smoke in the wind. Everything appears beautiful and serene.

A few marihuana cigarettes produce effects that last for a couple of days. During this time the addict is not himself at all. He feels strange overpowering urges and desires which, in his present condition, he hasn't the courage or strength to resist as would be the case if he had not indulged. He feels a strong urge to commit murder. In fact, this is one of the worst features of marihuana. It imbues the user with an insatiable desire to kill someone.

Many of the fiendish crimes of the night are committed by marihuana users, who are normally law-abiding citizens. But when on a marihuana jag they are not responsible for their actions. They can no more help yielding to their fiendish whims than the normal hungry person can help eating when food is set before him at meal-time or than he can help drinking when he is thirsty. In fact, he is utterly helpless when in the power of marihuana. The latter robs him of conscience. He no longer knows the difference between right and wrong or cares what he does, just as long as it satisfies his wild, unreasonable yearnings. No one is safe in the presence of a marihuana addict; he may go on a rampage at any time and wipe out a whole family.

Some of marihuana's other effects are most peculiar. Sounds are amplified out of all proportion to their real volume. A marihuana addict once told me that the noise made by a woodpecker jabbing away at a tree in the forest seemed like blasting to him. All noises are greatly magnified. Sensations, both pleasurable and otherwise, last for lengthy periods, in some cases threatening never to end.

Like other forms of dope, the more marihuana cigarettes one smokes the more he must smoke in order to keep comfortable. When the habit becomes firmly entrenched he can hardly get enough of the narcotic to satisfy him. If denied such cigarettes or unable to obtain them, his life is a living hell. Misery, the like of which is unknown to anyone but a "hophead" is his fate. This explains why he will go to any length to obtain the cigarettes, which are known to buyers and sellers as "reefers." He will even murder and rob. He will spend his last cent for them, even going about in rags if necessary. To the confirmed marihuana addict nothing matters except the cigarettes.

The number of lives ruined by narcotics in one form or another is beyond comprehension. Suffice it to say that it runs into millions. Every nation of the globe is fighting this curse with all the strength at its command. State and local authorities are taking part in the effort looking toward wholesale cleanup. But the general public should play a part in this crusade, too, warning their children not to accept any cigarettes from strangers. Smoking any kind of cigarettes is bad enough, but those made from marihuana are a thousand times more injurious than ones containing only tobacco. Marihuana leads to quick ruin; tobacco's ruin is accomplished more slowly even though just as surely.

The general public should not hesitate to disclose the whereabouts of cultivated marihuana plants to the authorities, who will take immediate steps toward confiscation and arrest. Adults and children should tip off officers when anyone tries to sell them cigarettes on the streets or anywhere outside of a store. Schools should sound a warning in the form of anti-narcotic programs planned to include the newest dope, which is marihuana. Churches, granges, clubs, lodges radio stations, magazines, newspapers and schools can perform a valued public service in battling this grave curse that has been foisted on an unsuspecting youth by men so low that they care not how many lives they ruin just so gold pours into the treasury. That is all they think of—all that matters—gold!

Not only human beings but horses fall victim to marihuana because the plant grows wild in isolated sections. It is known to cattlemen as "loco weed," which explains the expression "going loco," meaning crazy. Horses and other kinds of livestock devour marihuana unwittingly while grazing on the mesas of the west. Thus the habit is formed. One indulgence leads to another and still another. So pleasurable are the emotions that some animals refuse to leave regions where the plant may be obtained. Upon eating it they suffer pain, but the pleasant sensations far outweigh the distress and they keep indulging. They also become very thirsty, but, strangely enough, refuse to drink.

A strange plant, marihuana, and one that is rapidly undermining the lives of thousands of persons in this and other countries.

A Wonderland of the West

BY HARRY K. HOBART

Coming from the interior of Arizona and going toward the northern boundary of the state, one passes through the Canyon del muerto, Canyon of the dead, so named because of the massacre there of many of the Indians by their savage enemies. Visitors to this canyon find themselves in the neighborhood of a record carved on the side of a cliff which has caused wonder to Indians who revered the rude prehistoric rock pictures carved by a people of the past.

These Indians have thought that this particular inscription was one of the ancient series, but it is the record that tells of the passage in 1863, through these grim mountain recesses, of Colonel Christopher Carson, better known as Kit Carson, on his way to punish the Navaho Indians for their repeated raids upon the pioneers who settled there.

"Kit Carson's Calling Card," the inscription was called by those who first read its message chiseled deep into the sandstone.

The journey to the northern boundary of Arizona is rugged. But what a series of desert marvels it discloses, all the way from Navaho Mountain, which covers the boundary with its forbidding blue-black mass and makes difficult the journey of a few miles to one of our newer national monuments. This monument, Nonnezoché, the Rainbow Bridge, some have called the supreme wonder of the Southwest. From the walls of a side canyon near the junction of the Colorado and the San Juan rivers leaps the massive arch. It is so high the dome of the Capitol at Washington would be lost under it, and so perfect in its proportions that a mere human architect must stand dumb before it. When Zane Grey saw it, he said it was "the one great natural phenomenon, the one great spectacle that did not at first give vague disappointment." Then he went on to say:

"But this thing was glorious. It absolutely silenced me. Here was a rainbow, magnified even beyond dreams, a thing not transparent and ethereal, but solidified, a work of ages, sweeping up majestically from the red walls, its iris-hued arch against the blue sky."

After spending a night under the spell of its overshadowing vastness, he wrote:

"I realized that long before life had begun upon the earth this bridge had spread its grand arch from wall to wall, black and mystic at night, transparent and rosy in the sunrise, at sunset a flaming curve limned against the heavens. When the race of men had passed it would, perhaps, stand there still. It was not for many eyes to see. The tourist, the leisurely traveler, the comfort-loving motorist would never behold it. Only by toil, sweat, endurance and pain could any man ever look at Nonnezoché. It seemed well to realize this, that the most magnificent and uplifting spectacles have to be earned.

Nonnezache would always be alone, grand, silent, beautiful, unintelligible, and as such I bade it a mute reverent farewell."

West of the Rainbow Bridge, the Colorado crosses the border over the beginning of one of the canyons that is a prophecy of the breath-taking glory of the Grand Canyon. Beyond, the Kaibab National Forest with its towering pines shows the way to the Zion National Monument close to the border, but in Utah, where visitors have the privilege of making intimate acquaintance with a miniature Grand Canyon, not from the rim, but from the green banks of the Virgin River as it meanders far down below rock walls of varied colors which rise to an interminable height. Not far away is Bryce Canyon, whose spectacular formations are like gigantic spectral figures.

At the entrance to Zion Canyon is one of the Mormon villages, relic of the days of uncertainty when Brigham Young's saints were hiding from the government. A grim reminder of those days, still farther west is Pipe Spring National Monument, on the old Mormon Trail between Harrison, Utah, and Fredonia, Arizona. The features of the forty-acre tract set apart for the people by the government are the precious spring which supplied water to the travellers of those troublesome days, and Windsor Castle, a stronghold built by Mormon settlers under the direction of Brigham Young. This house is not so different from other sturdy frontier buildings, except for the loopholes from which for a time guns covered the approach of suspicious travellers.

The story of the marvels of the borders of Arizona and New Mexico might be continued southward to the Mexican line, thence eastward to the last wonder of all, the latest to be made known, which appeals to those who have visited it as in some respects the greatest of them all.

This wonder is the Carlsbad Cavern in the Guadalupe Mountains, not many miles from where the Pecos River crosses the line into Mexico. This cave was made the Carlsbad National Cavern on October 23, 1923.

The cavern is still difficult of access, but those who have visited it declare that in many respects it is unique among similar phenomena.

"Tunnels so long that no one has yet searched out their ends; ceiling so high that torchlights fail to illumine them; weird beauty in a thousand shapes," is the language of one enthusiast who has told of the cavern. Even a calculating scientist was carried away by his emotions when he first trod the halls of Carlsbad:

"It is a cavern of phenomenal size formed by a solution in a stratum of limestone about one thousand three hundred feet thick. Its known depth is about one thousand feet, and some of its chambers are on a similarly huge scale. The interior decorations, consisting chiefly of white onyx, are of titanic proportions. They range in size from the most delicate fret-work to columns hundreds of feet in circumference, reaching from the floor to heights beyond the illumination of the explorer's torch. Those who claim familiarity with other caverns assert that some of the chambers in Carlsbad Cavern are not equaled, either in size or in glory and the profusion of decorations, in any case yet discovered." This from the pen of an engineer of the United States Geological Survey.

From this we may see that there are still wonderful things which nature holds forth for us to see in our Western Wonderland.

There is no need of visiting Europe, or other remote parts of the earth, to find sights that are unique and sublime in grandeur and beauty. Right here at home there are many wonders that equal and even surpass those to be seen elsewhere.

The Day That Seemed to Go Wrong

BY CORA S. DAY

Little Mrs. Bronson smiled across the breakfast table at her husband Robert.

"I'm so glad it is bright and sunshiny," she said. "I will get off by ten o'clock, I think. That will give me lots of time for the bit of shopping I must do, and I will have all the rest of the day to spend with Ellen."

"Yes, I think you will have a nice day. I hope you have a pleasant visit, too," said Mr. Bronson, as he rose from the table.

Mrs. Bronson saw him off to the train and then went about her morning's work briskly. It was not an every-week occurrence with her, as it was with some of her friends and acquaintances in the little suburban town, to go to the city on a shopping and visiting trip. Her sister Ellen complained that she did not come half often enough. But Alice would laugh at her and reply: "The less I go shopping the less I spend. I have all the pretty things I really need, and those I don't buy help toward paying for the home."

But this time she truly did need some things for herself and a few for the house, and the visit to Ellen was indeed overdue. "I'll leave everything in order, and things all ready to get dinner quickly when I come home on the four o'clock train," she planned, and fairly flew about the pretty rooms, setting things to rights.

It was just a few minutes past nine when she gave a final satisfied glance about and started upstairs, when the doorbell rang.

"Oh!" she gasped in dismay as she turned to the door and saw through the lace-covered glass a familiar, old-fashioned bonnet and a rosy, wrinkled face. "Aunt Hetty—come in from the farm to spend the day—I know it as well as if she'd already told me." For a moment the pretty girlish face was clouded with a near-sowl.

Then repentance came swiftly as she thought to herself: "Shame on you, Alice Bronson, you can go see Ellen another day. Now that Aunt Hetty has taken the time and trouble to come, don't you dare let her see or know that it isn't just exactly the time you would have set for her visit. She's a dear, if she does happen to upset your plans this once. Probably she has been planning and working for a week to get this day off, instead of a few hours, as you have. Here's for giving her a good time." And she opened the door with a smile and a merry greeting for the beaming old lady who was just about to ring again.

"I've been planning to come and see you for a month," Aunt Hetty told Alice, when her things had been taken off and put away and she and her niece were comfortably settled for a chat. "I had it all settled to come yesterday," said Aunt Hetty; "but John was a little out of sorts and I wouldn't come off and leave him not feeling right spry. O yes, he's alright today—so I just dropped everything and came."

"That was quite right, Aunt Hetty," Alice said cordially and sincerely enough now. "We'll have a nice day together. I've gotten my work all done early this morning, so I can sit down with you with a clear conscience and work on my embroidery while we talk."

"And I've brought my knitting," chirped Aunt Hetty happily, glancing about at the neat rooms with satisfaction. Busy old soul, it was a real luxury to her to sit still and see all in order about her, with no need for herself or any one else to be bustling about. She did not dream why Alice's work was so soon done, but said innocently:

"You have it easy and pleasant here, child. If you had married a farmer, as I did, you wouldn't be all done with your day's work at nine in the morning," and she gave a little sigh at the thought of the busy days she had spent—and a little smile as she remembered how, after all, it had been a blessed, happy service for her farmer-lover husband, John.

"Oh, this is not always the rule of the day. It is something of an exception," laughed Alice, without attempting to explain. "Sometimes I'm busy as a bee all day long, too. But," she continued, with the same tender loyalty as that which had stirred Aunt Hetty's heart and brought the smile to her lips, "it is a pleasure, even the hardest work and day—when it is for the home and Robert," and she blushed and laughed at the little confession.

Presently it was lunch time, and they lingered over the dainty repast—some of which Alice had prepared for the evening dinner. It was almost two o'clock when they had put away the last pretty bit of china, which Aunt Hetty had insisted on drying for Alice.

"It is fun to wipe such nice dishes," she declared childishly, and Alice let her help until they were all done and ready to go back to their easy chairs and their fancy work. As they were leaving the kitchen, however, Alice turned back.

"Just a moment," she said, "I must see if my oil stove flame is turned entirely out." A glance showed her that it was, and she commented as she joined Aunt Hetty: "I find my new oil stove a great convenience for light cooking, like our lunch. But I had a hot wood fire in the range this morning, to bake some muffins for breakfast. Robert is so fond of them—and I haven't an oven on my oil stove yet."

After they had been chatting over their work for some time Alice suddenly thought of something that she was sure would please her visitor. She laid down her embroidery.

"We got ourselves a new radio since you were here last," she said, "would you like to hear some music?"

"Indeed, I'd love to," was the reply. Then she leaned forward with a little laugh. "Do you know, child, you're giving me such a good time that you've changed my plans for the afternoon. I thought when I started out: 'Now, maybe I ought to have sent Alice word I was coming. But it's too late now. I'll go, and if she's away, or home and busy, I'll just stay a while and then slip 'round to Mary Carter's, my old friend's, and spend the rest of the day.' But," she beamed at her young hostess, "You've been so free to visit with me, and I'm having such a good time, and good rest—and Mary is always fussy when I go there, she never takes time to sit down and visit like you—I'm just going to stay right here and enjoy myself until the half-past four suburban trolley."

For a moment Alice bent unsmiling over her sewing cabinet, her face hidden from Aunt Hetty, her morning's disappointment sweeping over her again in full force. "If I hadn't been so cordial and entertaining she wouldn't have stopped here long. I might have caught the next train and carried out my plans almost as fully as if she hadn't come at all."

Then came still swifter a vision of the happy old face, the note of satisfaction in the cheery old voice, and she was glad she had done all exactly as she did.

"Must you go before we have dinner?" she said, turning toward her with a smile. "It would be nice if you could spend the evening and see Robert. But if you can't—we'll just have to see how much good music programs we can get in the next hour." And she laughed as she turned the dial.

Aunt Hetty showed plainly her enjoyment of the treat—for the first few minutes. But before the selection was played all the way through, to Alice's surprise and chagrin Aunt Hetty became manifestly uneasy. Alice was puzzled to see her glance stray again and again toward the kitchen they had left shortly before. The moment the music stopped the mystery was solved.

"Did you say you had a wood fire this morning?" she demanded abruptly.

"Yes," said Alice, wondering.

"And you're sure it's all out before this?" came sharply now.

"Why of course, Aunt Hetty. We breakfast early, you know, and you saw me using the oil stove for getting luncheon ready," she replied.

Aunt Hetty was sniffing the air suspiciously. "I smell wood smoke anyway," she asserted. It's getting stronger every minute."

She was on her feet now, and even as she spoke Alice too, caught the pungent burning odor. With paling cheeks she rushed to the kitchen, to find all safe and no smoke at all. Back to the living room she went reassured—only to find Aunt Hetty half-way up the open stairs.

"It's stronger up here," the older woman cried, over her shoulder. Alice ran up and past her with the light swiftness of new fear. It was not hard to follow the trail now—and as she opened the attic she was met by a puff of smoke and an ominous crackling sound that told the tale.

The next few minutes passed in a swift maze of action. A glance from a window—a frenzied call for help to the two men opportunely passing—their quick response and prompt and intelligent use of the fire extinguishers Robert wisely kept at hand—and the pretty little home was saved with comparatively small damage.

"You were lucky not to be burned out, ma'am," one of the helpers said when it was all over. "That fire started from the chimney, and it would a' et out half the upper story before it showed outside, if you hadn't been in the house and smelled the smoke just about when you did."

Then he and his companion went off with Alice's fervent thanks warming their hearts; and Aunt Hetty came in for her share.

"I certainly have a sharp nose for smells," she said, with justifiable pride. "I'm glad I didn't go to Mary's this afternoon, but stayed right by you, dearie. Who knows, maybe you'd have gone out to make a little call or something if I hadn't been here to keep you home—and then you'd have come back to a heap of ashes, like as not."

"Who knows, maybe I would," half laughed, half sobbed Alice. She would not spoil the old lady's joy by confession. Aunt Hetty took the hugs and kisses bestowed upon her as partly gratitude, partly excitement, and went home at last well pleased with her day, even though she had changed her plan for spending it.

Not more pleased than Alice, though. That was impossible. But mingled with joy was an awe that she put into words when Robert came home and heard the whole story.

"I'm so thankful that my plans were upset and I was kept home by her coming. I feel as if I were more blessed than I deserve—for I felt real ugly about it at first," she confessed.

Robert smiled. "You got bravely over that, it seems to me," he said. "Aunt Hetty proved that by staying. And it seems to me; too, that we can let it help us remember that the days that seem to go wrong are often those that go right. Our plans are bound to be more shortsighted than God's. I often need to remember that in business. Perhaps we'll both remember it now in all things."

To which Alice gave soft assent.

Something to Do of an Evening

By O. P. SCHROERLUKE

For a small fellowship group a pleasant hour or two can be spent with simple puzzles and tricks, without previous preparation.

The button hole puzzle. This is made from a piece of wood, 4 or 5 inches in length, tapering a bit to resemble a needle, with a hole at the large end. Thread a piece of string through the eye and make a loop just a trifle shorter than the length of the needle. The trick of getting the needle looped in the button hole of a coat lapel, is to first pass the string loop past the hole and then punching the material in such a way that enough length is provided to get the needle through the button hole. That must be done quickly so that the victim is left to puzzle out the routine by which he can get rid of the thing again. If a number of such needles are available at the same time it will add greatly to the interest.

The snapping cork. A piece of wood about three inches long and three quarters of an inch square forms the bottle. A bluntly tapered piece forms the cork. A hole a little less than the size of a pencil is bored through the bottle. At the bottom a small piece of rubber band is inserted, permitting an end to stick out, and fastened by plugging the hole. A stick is fitted into the cork and the end shaped like a crochet hook. The demonstrator gives the appearance of hooking the rubber in the bottle which causes the cork to snap out of his fingers. Actually the rubber is never engaged, the snap resulting from the pressing motion of the fingers on the tapered cork.

In the novelty stores one can find many forms of interlocking block animals and other designs. Hooked links, keys, and trick opening boxes can also be secured at very small expense. With several items available it will be easy to keep a group occupied for some time.

A "Goat" game or two would prove a diversion. How about the one-eyed tailor. Send several boys to a darkened room to wait their turns. The first one is called in and given a needle to thread. He must, however, use only one eye and to be sure that he does not peep with the other, the leader holds the eye shut with the fingers. When the threading is completed the tailor is sent back to the darkened room with appropriate praise and the next one is given his turn. The leader covers the eye with fingers covered with lamp black or burnt cork and thus leaves every tailor with a "shiner." When all have completed their turns they are brought into the group again to make their respective discoveries.

Also arrange for a period of riddles. Various books will give an ample supply. With a little ingenuity many suitable questions can be made up. Observation of several radio programs will give a leader a lot of ideas. Professor Quiz, for example.

Here are a few brain teasers.

A. A Father was questioned about the size of his family. He said, "I have three and a half dozen." How many were there?

B. Which is the most, six dozen or a half a dozen dozen?

C. A storekeeper asked a lady how many eggs were in her basket. She replied, "I do not remember, but when I counted them 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 at a time always one remained. But when I counted 7 at a time they came out even? How many eggs were in the basket?"

Solutions: A. 9; B. Six dozen dozen, or 864, the other is only 72; C. 301 would be the least number of eggs possible.

A HERO'S GREAT WORD

Raymond Lull was a brilliant student at the University of Montpelier and later became a professor there. Then he turned his back on the splendid prospects and undertook to preach Christ to the Mohammedans, although this meant to court death.

A year and a half he was imprisoned in a dungeon. Twice he was banished from the shores of North Africa. At last, taken beyond the walls, he was stoned to death. As the stones were falling upon him, before he became unconscious, he said: "He that loves not lives not, and he that lives by the Life never dies."

Here is the secret of heroic living. He had learned to love Christ devotedly, and learning to love Him, he learned to love his fellow-man and to seek his salvation with a passion like Christ had to save us. How does this agree with our own way of living?

WHENCE AND WHITHER?

LIZZIE HARDING UNDERWOOD

Whence cometh the wind as it wildly sweeps,
And whither away as it onward leaps?
No tongue can tell.
We hear the sound as it passeth by
On its unseen course 'twixt the earth and sky—
A sad farewell.

Whence cometh the sting of an angry word,
And whither the stream by its poison stirred?
We may not know.
For angry words pass on time's stream away,
But the sting lives on forever and aye—
A deadly flow.

PHOEBE HOME

FOR AGED AND INFIRM — Allentown, Pa.

Supported by Five Synods in Eastern Pennsylvania and New York Synod

Above, left, is shown console and microphone of Hammond Electric Organ, used in daily morning worship and in the regular Sunday services, in the large living room of the Home. Right is shown additional amplifier in the lobby of the infirmary, bringing daily morning worship and Sunday services to the occupants of the infirmary, even to those who are confined to bed.

The infirmary, normally 20 beds, is much too small to adequately supply the needs of the constituency. A new infirmary building of at least 60 beds is an urgent necessity. Here is an opportunity for some one to establish a precious memorial.

Starting for Junior High and High School at the German Protestant Orphans' Home, St. Louis, Mo.

TRULY, A HOME FOR CHILDREN

Five thousand girls and boys, bereft of one or both parents, have come to the German Protestant Orphans' Home and, in its comfortable, Christian surroundings, have grown into useful and happy mature life. Through eighty-two years the Home thus has been God's agency in protecting and developing the mind and heart and spirit of childhood.

A substantial building, furnished and equipped by noble men and women who have a compassion for youth in need, provides a true Home. Situated in the large park of a 94 acre farm, the Home affords quiet, pure air and wholesome environment. Good food, full medical attendance, proper clothing, opportunities for grade and high school education and loving Christian training for life's duties—these essentials to a rich future are fully met by the Home. Every phase of our work with Childhood is planned to meet the requirements for the best service to society and the Church.

Our support comes almost wholly from free-will gifts of men and women who love children and seek to serve the needy ones in Christ's fold. We ask your aid in gifts for today and remembrance in your will. As stewards, we do not permit a single day of distress to come to these little ones, who are entrusted to our care. Please, think of us in your prayers and share with us your pence, and God will bless you.

Seventeen major buildings constitute the equipment which includes Administration Building, cottages, infirmary, school, church, and barns. The present imperative needs of the Home are an adequate modern school-building, two additional dormitories, and a swimming pool.

Homewood cares for sixteen guests, but the waiting list is large. Some good old faithful feeble people of our Church, for their last few years, must live in the homes of kind neighbors. Since they have helped the Church through many years, the Church should help them through a few years. Our great need is equipment and enlargement of the present building.

THE GERMAN PROTESTANT HOME FOR ORPHANS AND OLD PEOPLE

West Grand Boulevard, Detroit, Michigan

Our orphans' and old people's home is situated in one of the most beautiful sections of Detroit. We cordially welcome Evangelical people who may come to Detroit to visit our institution. A Grand River car to West Grand Blvd. will bring them right to the home. . . . The home is under control of the Michigan and Ohio Districts of our Evangelical Synod and is dependent upon friends within our Church for its support. . . . Our Home is able to accommodate 125 children and 50 old people. To meet our daily requirements is quite a problem at this time of social misery as the conduct for our institution is dependent more than ever before upon the generosity of our friends in the Synod. . . . We cordially solicit your interest and express our gratitude to the many friends who have heretofore supported us. . . . Bequests must be made in favor of "German Protestant Home for Orphans and Old People, c/o Mr. Chas. Reibling, Treasurer, 1433 Bagley St., Detroit, Mich." Other contributions will be gratefully received by the superintendent, Rev. F. Lueckhoff, 1852 W. Grand Blvd., Detroit, Mich. Phone: Tyler 5-8800.

Years of Service without a Single Lawsuit Is Quite a Record.

Years of Service with a Balance at the End of Each Year Is a Better Record.

Years without a Single Contested Claim Is a Still Better Record.

There are other records which could be mentioned which the Mutual Fire and Storm Insurance Association has established during its affiliation with the Evangelical Synod of North America, now affiliated with the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

The Association insures the property owned and controlled by the Synod (Church), property of the congregation, property and household goods owned by pastors, missionaries, teachers, deaconesses, lay and commissioned workers, also the property and household goods owned by the members of the congregation.

The Household Goods and Personal Effects of pastors are always insured, except while in transit.

Our "set up" permits us to offer the same coverage to the small rural church as to city churches, without advance in price.

In addition to Fire and Storm we now also offer to our policyholders the Extended Coverage, formerly called the Supplemental Contract.

All policies are written on the approved Standard Form Policy.

The annual assessment plan has been replaced by the annual in advance premium plan.

Our Articles of Incorporation have been renewed for another term of twenty years.
